Rebels Repel Attack; Paraguayan, Austrian Consuls Believed Slain

Two Suicidal Offensives Take Heavy Toll of Loyalist Militia.

Government Army Threatens Burgos

Two Consuls Executed in Bilbao as Spies, Broadcast Says.

By the United Press.

Lisbon, Nov. 29.—The redio station at Salamanca reported tonight that the Austrian and Paraguayan consuls had been executed on charges of espionage at Bilbao, controlled by Spanish loyalists.

Loyalists Pushed Back.

By the United Press.

With the Nationalist Armies, Casa de Campo, Nov. 29.—Blue-jacketed militiamen of Madrid's Loyalist defenders swept across muddy fields north of Madrid in great waves today in two suicidal attacks on the extreme flank positions of the nationalists.

Bearded Moroccan regulars and Foreign Legionnaires, crouching behind machine guns in shallow trenches, held their ground and mowed down the counter-attacking militia by scores.

At the same time Gen. Francisco Franco's flying columns, taking advantage of the loyalists' disorganized retreat, drove through suburban streets and toward the Cautro Caminos, strategically important and heavily fortified point near the new University City.

The loyalists' first counteroffensive was launched against the village of Valdermoro, on the nationalists' right flank, and the second against the rebel trenches that bulwark the left flank of the Casa de Campo sector.

Sector's Heaviest Firing.

The thickest rain of shells and bullets experienced in the sector since the siege of Madrid began, 22 days ago, marked the second counterattack.

As the Socialist militiamen came splashing through the mud, screaming and swinging rifles above their heads, a terrific artillery battle broke out.

The machine guns of the Moors and legionnaires kept up a staccatto rat-a-tat until the loyalists retreated about 1 p. m., leaving heaps of dead.

The counterattacks were launched after nationalist troops repulsed a dawn attack by two 25-car steel-shelled armored trains loaded with 2,000 fanatically daring militiamen, at Valdemoro.

Rebel machine guns halted the armored trains, however, and mowed down scores of militiamen as they tried to dash to safety in the nearby hills.

Loyalist gunners remained within the trains, attempting to wipe out the nationalist machine gun nests with salvos of shells.

After an indecisive, two-hour battle the loyalist locomotives chugged away in retreat.

The militiamen who had darted from the trains and taken positions of shelter ran frantically after the trans until a company of nationalist cavalrymen swept after them, cutting them down with 4-foot sabers.

Raid Toll Heavy.

Valencia, Spain, Nov. 29 (AP).—Officials said tonight a large toll of life was taken in Saturday night's insurgent air raid on Alicante.

After the first panic, they said, the inhabitants sought refuge in an orderly fashion and by so doing probably prevented larger casualties.

Valencia tonight prepared for attack from either land or sea as citizens were warned to observe regulations and warning sirens.

Windows in the center of the city were boarded up so that light could not seep through and give enemy air-raiders targets for their bombs.

The city was put on its guard while War Minister Indalecio Prieto declared the Spanish civil war will last "at least through the winter," and will "see a far more intensive stage" than the present bloody battle for possession of Madrid.

Loyalists Move on Burgos.

Madrid, Nov. 29 (AP).—The Spanish Socialist government asserted today the backbone of the Fascist drive against Madrid had been broken and that Socialist troops were pushing toward Burgos, seat of the insurgent junta.

"The initiative is now in our hands," the Madrid defenders declared as bright sunshine made the

Gridiron Club to Hear Roosevelt and Landon

President Roosevelt and Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican Presidential candidate in the recent election, have accepted invitations to speak at the forthcoming dinner of the Gridiron Club, Washington newspaper correspondents' organization.

Also invited to attend the dinner December 21 are three other candidates in the last election—Norman Thomas, of the Socialist Party; Earl Browder, of the Communist Party, and William Lemke, of the Union Party.

Following custom, the addresses of Mr. Roosevelt and Gov. Landon, the only invited speakers, will not be made public.

Germany Warned 7,000 Planes Nearly Ready to Defend Soviet Molotoff Says Russia Loves the People of Reich, but Hates Their Leaders; Baltic Neighbors Cautiond Against Flirting With Fascism.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Nov. 29.—Vyacheslaff Molotoff, president of the council of commissars, today professed Russia's love for the German people but hate for their leaders after announcement 7,000 airplanes and 100,000 pilots soon will be ready to defend the Soviet Union.

Molotoff, who by his position is often called "Russia's premier," received a tumultuous ovation when he told the eighth All-Union Congress of Soviets;

"Nazi leaders have well earned their appellation of 'modern cannibals.' The Nazi attitude is one of barbarism and cruelty. These Fascists are destroying culture and advocating monstrous racial theories.

"Their persecution of Jews is in marked contrast with our respect for this race which gave us Carl Marx. Hitler is using the laws of scapegoats for his nation's internal difficulties, whereas in the Soviet Union active anti-Semites are shot."

Earlier, the congress heard a tart warning to Baltic nations to "mind their own business" and keep away from fascism.

"If the planes of German Fascists threaten our country, woe unto them," declared Corps Commander Krhipin, assistant commander of the Red army air forces.

"Germany says she will have 70,000 fliers in the near future," he said. "We answer we will have at least 100,000. It is not a fantastic figure.

"The Society for Preparedness and Defense alone will graduate 8,000 pilots in 1936."

Krhipin's report gave the congress more and more a warlike appearance, following yesterday's sessions, at which 1,700 per cent increases in naval armaments were revealed and Foreign Minister Maxim Litvinoff charged Germany and Japan had signed a secret military pact which

France to Give Britain Pledge Of Aid in War

Delbos to Warn All Nations Against Attacking Ally or Belgium.

By the United Press.

Paris, Nov. 29.—Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos will warn "potential European trouble makers" this week that any aggression against England or Belgium will bring an immediate mobilizatiin of France's entire fighting strength.

Delbos, adopting the policy of British Foreign Minister Anthony Eden in laying down a "preventive warning," will make his announcement in the Chamber of Deputies Friday during a debate on foreign policy.

Premier Leon Blum paved the way when he told 25,000 supporters of his Popular Front government at the Velodrome d'Hiver Saturday night that "France possesses the most powerful military force in western Europe."

France's promise to go to Britain's aid in the event of war will be extended to 'nclude Belgium, despite King Leopold's recent declaration that Belgium has returned to her traditional policy of neutrality.

By publicly pronouncing wartime reciprocity and mutual assistance guarantees on the part of France and England, the French foreign minister and Eden hope to eliminate any doubts which might linger in Europe's chancellories and make it clear that the two democracies intend to apply fully, and immediately, all the reciprocal assistance pledges under Locarno.

These pledges will be carried out, Delbos will say, regardless of whether the aggression is against French or Belgian frontiers or against British positions in the Mediterranean.

A spokesman of the Quai d'Orsay, in commenting on the impending declaration today, said:

"In these troubled times, when the international situation is uncertain, a warning will be given by France to governments which might consider trying another such adventure as that of 1914."

John Barleycorn Victim of Hitler's Four-Year Plan

Berlin, Nov. 29 (AP).—The heavy hand of Reichsfuehrer Hitler's four-year plan for economic rehabilitation of the third Reich today fell on old John Barleycorn.

A decree forbade use of wheat or rye for distillation of whisky, and distilleries were prohibited from buying, and farmers from selling rye or wheat for such purposes.

The brewries are permitted to continue turning out beer.

Equal Russians In Arms, Tokyo Urges Populace

Seeks Support of Nation for Huge Armament; Warns of Conflict.

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo, Nov. 29.—Japan, joined with Germany in a pledge against communism, made known today her desire to build quickly an army equal to that of Soviet Russia.

The huge armament is necessary, the war office declared, to 'prevent war and to hold Japan's lifeline on the (Asiatic) continent," against both China and Russia.

A pamphlet setting forth the war ministry's ambitions was avowedly intended to prepare the nation for large-scale increases in the country's armaments—almost half of the 1936-37 budget appropriation approved last week by the cabinet was for armaments.

The army was given $205,000,000 and the navy $194,480,000.

Japan, through Admiral Osami Nagano, minister of marine, announced yesterday the navy also will be enlarged as soon as Parliament approves the new budget estimates.

The war office asserted:

"Consideration of the military strengths of the Soviet Union and China shows that Japan's continental armaments, so important for national defense, are extremely inadequate. Both to prevent war and to hold Japan's lifeline on the continent, replenishment of military armaments is a matter of urgent necessity.

Cites Soviet Strength.

"The Far Eastern strength of the Soviet Union in time of peace is 15 divisions of infantry, 1,000 or so airplanes, divided into more than 100 air units, and about 1,000 tanks. In addition, the Soviets have constructed impregnable fortresses on the border and are in a position to pounce on Manchukuo at a moment's notice, glaring across the frontier with the eyes of a tiger. (Moscow said today her army has 7,000 airplanes.)

"And what is the strength of the Japanese garrison in Manchukuo? Numerically, it is only a third or a fourth of the Soviet, and it has but a fraction of the Soviet planes and tanks. With this weak strength, Japan is patrolling a border extending 5,000 kilometers, maintaining peace and order in an area equivalent to France and Germany together and guarding railways extending 10,000 kilometers.

"In a possible future war, enemy planes can be expected, immediately on its outbreak, to attempt air raids on Tokyo and the principal military and munitions bases of the country. Were Japan to lack the strength to resist these air raids at the very outset, it would be placed on the defensive and

Mollison Starts Capetown Hop; Seeks Record Held by His Wife

By the Associated Press.

Croydon, England, Nov. 29.—Capt. James A. Mollison and his co-pilot, Edouard Corniglion-Molinier, took off at 9:31 a. m. today on their projected speed dash to Capetown, South Africa.

They said they hoped to make the return tri to England within five days. Their plans called for refueling stops at Marseilles, Cairo, Khasum and Johannesburg.

Their plane was Mollison's Dorothy, in which he made a west-east Atlantic crossing last October 30.

(Mollison landed late tonight at Cairo, Egypt, to refuel. He planned to take off again at once.)

"The voyage of the Dorothy is going to be a round-trip if all goes well," Mollison said before stepping into the ship.

"After snatching a few hours' sleep at Capetown, we intend to turn around and make another dash for home."

The present England-Capetown records, both ways, are held by Mollison's wife, Amy, who flew the southern leg in 3 days, 6 hours, 26 minutes, May 7, and the northern leg in 4 days, 16 hous and 18 minutes.

Her times eclipsed previous records set by Capt. Mollison.

Capt. Corniglion-Molinier, a Frenchman, was a member of the expedition which from the air discovered the Lost Empire of the Queen of Sheba in March, 1934.

Car Fatalities For 1936 Due To Set Record

Total of 37,500 Deaths in U. S. Predicted by Safety Council.

Gain of 500 Is Forecast; Rise in Pedestrian Cases Shown.

By the United Press.

Chicago, Nov. 29.—When all the crushed and mangled bodies have been counted, 1936 will be recorded as the Nation's worst year for traffic fatalities, the National Safety Council predicted tonight.

The council, forecsting an all-time high of 37,500 motor accident deaths, 500 more than in 1935, blamed the increase on pedestrians.

"More persons are walking into trouble this year than last, according to figures for nine months," said R. L. Forney, who graphs the council's statistics. "Fatal pedestrian accidents jumped about 2 per cent for this period, while other types of motor vehicle accidents dropped about 1 per cent."

The trend to pedestrian deaths reverses the tendency of recent years, he said. From 1927 to 1935 pedestrian deaths increased only 29 per cent, while other traffic accident fatalities advanced 57 per cent.

While children grow more careless, the council figures indicated, old folk cross streets more warily. Forney found the "most unfavorable" trend in accident deaths among children between 5 and 14 years of age, 10 per cent above the 1935 level, while there was a 6 per cent drop in the "65 years or more" classification.

Deaths Fall on Gallon Basis.

The council statisticians found two "favorable aspects" in the mounting death toll, one of them indicating that the end of the depression may not be an unmixed blessing.

They found, first, that the annual increase will be much less than has occurred in other years and secondly, that the gasoline consumption rate has increased over that of 1935 much faster than the death rate.

"From 1934 to 1935," Forney said, "fatalities advanced a total of 900 and the 1934 total was nearly 5,000 larger than that of 1933."

While this year's consumption of gasoline is 10 per cent higher than 1935, he explained, the death rate per 10,000,000 gallons of gasoline is 9 per cent below 1935.

New Hampshire, with a 23 per cent reduction, topped the list of 16 States showing reductions from their 1935 totals. Others showing reductions for the period ended November 1 were: North Carolina, 13; Connecticut, 11; New Jersey, 9; Maryland, New York and Virginia, 8 per cent each, and Maine, 7 per cent.

Gentlemen Drunks Fail to Patronize Deluxe Patrol Car

Tampa, Fla., Nov. 29 (AP).—Police Chief C. J. Woodruff surveyed first week-end reports today of his recently inaugurated "home James" service for "gentlemen drunks," and wondered if it was worth while.

Last week the chief announced a de luxe black maria service for "respectable citizens" who drank too much. He thought the service might prevent traffic accidents.

Today Woodruff fingered reports on Saturday night's business.

One client, whose name was withheld, was taken home.

A second telephone for a police cab, but couldn't give his whereabouts, so they left him there.

The third requested the service, but the attending officer ruled he didn't qualify as a gentleman, and took him to jail.

Skeleton-LikeBody Is Found in Protein

Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 29 (AP).—A major development in science, discovery of a skeleton-like structure in the proteins which compose the principal part of the human body, is reported in nature, the British Journal of Science.

Dr. Dorothy M. Wrinch, of the Mathematical Institute, Oxford, England, finds that protein molecules, which are known as the "building blocks" of living matter, are all alike on one side. Their structure on this similar side resembles a lattice such as is set up in a garden for climbing vines.

It has been known that there is an almost endless number of different proteins composing the human body. They are known to be chemically different.

Street Battle Sends Fighter to Hospital

Thaddeus Sullivan, 44, of 111 Anacostia avenue northeast, was in a serious condition last night in Casualty Hospital with a fractured jaw and head injuries suffered in a fight several days ago.

According to police, Sullivan and an unidentified man became involved in an argument in front of a lunchroom at Minnesota avenue and Benning road northeast, and Sullivan was knocked to the sidewalk. He was treated at home until his physician yesterday became alarmed at his condition and placed him in the hospital where doctors said his condition is serious.

Double Taxes Levied by U.S., States Listed

Treasury Survey Reveals Millions Involved in Duplication.

Federal Revenue Twice as Large as States in Such Cases.

By Felix Bruner.

A Treasury Department study revealed yesterday that the States and the Federal Government duplicate their taxing systems to the point where they collect millions of dollars from the same revenue sources. The study, in addition, revealed that from these sources the Government collects about $2 for every $1 collected by all the States.

The report was the first resulting from a study of duplicate taxation instigated by President Roosevelt. The President announced some time ago that he planned to call a conference early next year for the purpose of working out a program to eliminate taxation duplication between the States and the Federal Government.

In addition it was revealed that less than half a dozen of the States collect most of the taxes. Search by the States for new sources of revenue was disclosed, particularly by the growth in the last few years of collections from sales taxes.

Cases of Duplication.

In their study of double taxation, the division of research and statistics of the Treasury gathered data on estate and inheritance taxes, individual income taxes, corporation income taxes, gasoline taxes, motor vehicle registrations and licenses, general sales taxes, liquor taxes and tobacco taxes. In all these categories except vehicle registration and licenses and general sales taxes the Government and the States duplicate, doubly taxing individuals and corporations.

The size of Government revenues as compared with those of all the States combined was indicated by the fact that in the categories listed the Goverment in 1935 collected $2,271,400,000 in taxes, while the States collected $1,049,900,000.

The collections were divided as follows:

	Federal revenue.	State. revenue.
Inheritance	$140,440,000	$100,800,000
Individual income	527,112,000	100,000,000
Corporation income	572,117,000	58,900,000
Unsegregated income	.....	7,800,000
Gasoline	161,532,000	589,200,000
Liquor	411,021,000	166,600,000
Tobacco	459,178,000	28,600,000

State Revenue Up.

The Treasury experts said motor vehicle and license taxes were incorporated in the report because they were paid by substantially the same people who pay gasoline taxes to the Federal Government and that sales taxes were included because Government excise taxes frequnetly cover the articles on which such State taxes are paid. Incidentally, the report disclosed that in 1935 the States collected 31 per cent more taxes from the sources listed than they did in 1930.

The number of States collecting income taxes from individuals or corporations or both increased from 19 in 1930 to 30 in 1935. Twenty-five States reported collections from general sales taxes in 1935, as against only two in 1930. Twenty-three States reported collections from tobacco excise taxes and licenses in 1935, as compared with 16 in 1930. All States, except Alabama and Kansas, reported collections from liquor excise taxes and licenses in 1935, and 12 States reported profits from operation of liquor stores. In 1935 all States, except Nevada and the District of Columbia, collected estate or inheritance taxes.

Collections Concentrated.

"Collections from every one of the eight taxes here considered are concentrated in relatively few States," the report said.

"Nearly one-half of the estate and inheritance taxes were collected by two States, New York and Pennsylvania. Three States, Massachusetts, New York and Wisconsin, regularly collected considerable more than four-fifths of the individual income taxes, and four States, California, New York, North Carolina and Wisconsin, more than two-thirds of the corporation income taxes.

"Five States, California, Illinois, Michigan, New York and Ohio, collected three-fourths of the sales taxes in 1934 and two-thirds of the sales taxes in 1935, and three States, Louisiana, Ohio and Texas, collected about one-half of the tobacco taxes from 1932 to 1935.

"The motor taxes show lesser con-

Roosevelt Welcomed By Argentina's Fleet 200 Miles Off Coast

Peak Output Calls for $3,623 Income Per Family, A.F.L. Says

Federation's Monthly Survey Appeals for Wage Increases to Keep Step With Business Gains; Cites Widespread Dividend Distribution.

Pleading that wage increases keep pace with increasing dividends, the American Federation of Labor in its monthly survey of business yesterday declared every family in the United States should have an income of at least $3,623 a year to bring about "capacity production." On the basis of a 40-hour week, this would mean an hourly wage of $1.77 for each family head.

The Federation's analysis foresaw a continued increase in national income, but warned that if wealth is not "equitably distributed," business expansion must end within a few years and another depression follow.

"One 5 per cent or 10 per cent increase this year is not enough," the federation bulletin said in discussing wages. "We must plan for a progressively rising wage level that will eventually create production for a comfort living standard. That industry can eventually pay the comfort wage is unquestioned, for, provided distribution of income is equitable, capacity operation of our industries will in itself create the wealth necessary to pay it."

In contrast to a "capacity production" wage, the federation contended a wage of at least 73 cents an hour is necessary to support a family of four in health and efficiency. Average wages, however, the report stated, are now only 58 cents an hour and millions of workers receive less than this amount.

Dividend payments in November reached the highest level in history, the federation report pointed out.

"Contrasting strongly with the record of hourly wages, which have made no significant increase since the summer of 1934, dividends have increased steadily, this summer's payments being above 1934 by 36 per cent," the report said.

U. S. Rearming Rouses Canada, Official States

Program 'Belies' Words of Peace, Miss MacPhail Says in Town Hall.

Canada is becoming restive in the face of the drastic rearmament program undertaken by the United States, Miss Agnes MacPhail, only woman member of the Canadian Parliament, told the Town Hall of Washington last night.

"We think it is time you called a halt to your increasing military and naval appropriations if we are to take to heart the sweet words of peace and good will that drop from the lips of your President," said Miss MacPhail.

Canadians accept the explanation that this country's rearmament program is for defensive purposes only, Miss MacPhail said, and added:

"But a rearmament program after it reaches certain proportions becomes offensive to those looking on, whether it is for defensive purposes or not."

Canada, said Miss MacPhail, is attentively watching the "neighborly" meeting of American nations in South America.

"I wish as a North American that Canada was taking part in that meeting," declared the Canadian stateswoman, who time and again won applause from the audience with her quick wit and nimble mind.

"Should Participate."

"It is a neighborhood meeting and Canada as a neighbor should participate.

"We hope there will be no domination on the part of the United States at the meeting if it is to achieve its purpose."

After completing her scheduled address, Miss MacPhail quickly turned the tables on the Town Hall panel when she asked E. Dana Durand, member of the United States Tariff Commission, if the United States would continue to purchase gold from Canada in the quantities it has in the past.

As Durand, former director of the Census, hesitated, Kemper Simpson, consulting economist and secretary of the Securities and Exchange Commission and a panel member, interrupted:

"I wish the United States would get rid of some of its gold," he said. "We do not get any interest on it—all we get is a sense of security. I would like to see Canada direct its flow of gold to Germany, Austria and the other countries with depreciated currencies and unbalanced budgets.

"After all, England at the height of its power as a trading nation never kept large stocks of gold on hand. She encouraged the free flow of gold, but kept interest bearing paper."

Laughingly, Miss MacPhail, who

Bodies of Pair Lost 7 Weeks Found in Auto

Police Believe Marylander Shot Wife and Turned Gun on Self.

By the Associated Press.

Towson, Md., Nov. 29.—A seven-week search for an estranged couple ended today with the discovery of their bodies in an automobile parked on a little-used logging road near here.

Police said the evidence indicated the husband, Walter Leight, 40, had put his arm about his wife, Myrtle, 38, shot her beneath the heart and then killed himself.

Physicians said the couple apparently had been dead since shortly after Leight in early October drove to a home where his wife was staying, called her to the automobile and drove away with her.

The automobile had remained in the woods while city and county police searched almost without letup for the couple. It finally was found by a colored man who lives nearby.

"During our investigation," said Lieut. William B. Dorsey, of county police, "we found that Leight desired a divorce, after 23 years of marriage, but that Mrs. Leight would not consent to it. He wanted to marry another woman whose name is known to us."

Leight last lived and worked at Leonardtown, Md. The couple is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Judith Weil, of Baltimore, and Mrs. Dorothy Baird, of Virginia.

Hotel Fire Routs 45 In Cold at Richlands

Richlands, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—Fire originating in the boiler room of the Eagle Hotel routed 45 guests to the street in near-freezing weather here early today.

One man trapped on the third floor was rescued by means of an extension ladder. He was overcome by smoke, firemen said. Robert Repass, a volunteer fireman, was injured when he was run over by a hose truck en route to the blaze.

Surprised at Safe, Thief Shoots Trooper, Flees

Cazenovia, N. Y., Nov. 29 (AP).—A thief discovered at work today in Cazanovia Central School shot a State trooper in the thigh after a hand-to-hand fight and escaped.

The wounded trooper is John E. Wheeler, who, with Trooper John H. Wisner, discovered the thief trying to open a safe when they followed footprints through the snow to the school.

11 Ships Fire 21-Gun Salute for President; Honor Returned.

Squadron Escorts Cruiser to Capital

1,200,000 to Greet Chief Executive at Buenos Aires.

By the United Press.

Aboard Argentine Cruiser Almirante Brown at Sea, Nov. 29.—Twenty-one-gun salutes from 11 Aregentine warships welcomed President Roosevelt to Argentina today, when an escort fleet sighted the U. S. S. Indianapolis off the Uruguayan coast.

Prelude to a gala welcome awaiting the President, when he reaches Buenos Aires at 2 p. m. tomorrow, the Argentine fleet saluted Mr. Roosevelt off Cape Polonio, 200 miles at sea.

The Indianapolis, with Mr. Roosevelt standing at attention on the bridge, returned the salute.

Four thousand Argentine seamen, clad in spotless white, lined the decks of the Almirante Brown and ten other Argentine fighting ships during the ceremony.

A late afternoon sun shone as the contact was made.

In formation came the Almirante Brown, torpedoboats Mendoza, La Rioja; Cervantes and Garay the 25,000-ton flagship dreadnought Moreno and its sister ship, Rivadavia, and destroyers Cordoba, Catamarca, Jujuy and La Plata.

Salute Returned.

Rear Admiral Leon Scasso, commander of the escort squadron, stood at the bridge of the Moreno and gave the order for the 21-gun salvo.

After returning the salute, the Indianapolis hoisted the Argentine flag in a gesture of friendship.

The grayness of the pride of Argentine's battle fleet was relieved by lines of flags, which streamed out strongly in a brisk breeze.

The squadron filed past the Indianapolis, led by the Almirante Brown, which then turned about to lead the escort into Buenos Aires. Two destroyers took position on each side of the Indianapolis, the remainder of the squadron drawing up behind the U. S. S. Chester, which has accompanied the Indianapolis from the United States.

Escort Indianapolis.

The 13 warships then proceeded toward the River Platte, to enter Argentine waters at the Recalada Lighthouse.

The flotilla will be met tomorrow in the river by the gunboats Independencia, Parana, Libertad and Rosario, commanded by Vice Admiral Saenz.

At this meeting, the Indianapolis will fire a 21-gun salute, to which the Independencia will reply, a salute directed to President Agustin P. Justo of Argentina. Then the Independencia will fire 21 guns to President Roosevelt.

Nineteen naval planes from Punta Indio base will greet the flotilla from aloft.

After this reception, the Indianapolis will lead the procession, entering the port first under escort of 40 army airplanes from El Palomar.

Argentine Capital Excited.

Buenos Aires, Nov. 29 (U.P.).—An excited, flag-draped city tonight awaited the arrival tomorrow of President Roosevelt, first American President to touch Argentine shores.

The Argentine cruiser Almirante Brown steamed slowly up the coast to escort the U. S. S. Indianapolis to the capital and crowds from all over the nation, released from work tomorrow by a national holiday in Mr. Roosevelt's honor, flocked into the city on special trains.

First official function of the Inter-American Peace Conference, which President Roosevelt will attend, was held today when 110 diplomatic delegates to the conference were formally received by Foreign Minister Carlos Saavedra Lamas.

Dignitaries of each nation were introduced in alphabetical order, Beginning with Bolivia, ending with Venezuela. This was followed by a tea, tendered by Saavedra Lamas and his wife.

Silk-hatted and frock-coated delegates were seen on the streets, in the churches and around government buildings, attracting crowds which lined the streets and cheered.

Welcome Rehearsed.

Not the least excited by the display was Juan Pueblo, Argentina's "average citizen," who will have a great day tomorrow. He will stand on the American embassy steps

Moscow's 'Curtailed' Display of Rembrandts Revives Rumors Soviet Sold Works Secretly

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Nov. 29.—Art circles here are mystified and greatly concerned because from 16 to 19 Rembrandt paintings are missing from a current exhibition of the famous old master's works.

In the absence of any official explanation, foreign art critics are wondering if these paintings were secretly sold abroad by the Soviet government during the lean years around 1930-1931.

The facts are these: the Rembrandt collection which opened in the Moscow Museum of Fine Arts November 11 has 29 paintings of the Dutch painter on exhibit. These had been widely advertised and openly stated to be the complete Soviet collection of Rembrandts.

Twenty-three of these Rembrandts shown came from the Hermitage Museum in Leningrad and the other six from the Museum of Fine Arts.

Art connoisseurs recalled there were 42 Rembrandts in the Hermitage before the revolution, of which 38 were of undoubted authenticity. All reference books written before the revolution listed the 42 paintings.

Soviet reference and travel books written in 1923 and 1928 likewise list 42 Rembrandts as being in the Hermitage collection. Later handbooks make no mention of the number of Rembrandts at the Hermitage.

Observers here recalled old rumors that the Soviet government in its difficulties around 1930 had disposed secretly of many famous paintings, including some Rembrandts, but this always was denied. Andrew W. Mellon was said then to have purchased Soviet art treasures.

Now only 23 of the Hermitage collection are being shown here in what is stated to be the Soviet's complete collection.

The missing works include many of Rembrandt's most famous paintings.

President Cold To Third Term, Writer Asserts

Legislative Riders Urged to Avoid Amendment of Constitution.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 29.—In what the publishers term an authoritative article on President Roosevelt's plans and purposes, George Creel says the President has no intention of seeking a third term.

The article, released tonight prior to publication in a forthcoming issue of Collier's magazine, quotes the President himself as saying:

"On January 21, 1941, when a new President takes over, I will be in Hyde Park having the time of my life."

Creel, who headed the Bureau of Public Information at Washington during the Wilson Administration, when Mr. Roosevelt was Assistant Secretary of the Navy, says the President's hope is "the establishment of a new social order that will retain every value of the old but at the same time will take courageous cognizance of vast changes and the imperative needs evolved by these changes."

Writes on Amendment.

He raises the question whether a Constitutional amendment really would be necessary "for the attainment of New Deal objectives." Two alternatives are suggested, as follows:

"If the coming session witnesses the adoption of a housing bill, or a bil providing for maximum hours and minimum wages, or a bill relating to sweat shops and child labor, or the new Guffey coal bill, each of these acts could have a rider attached charging the Supreme Court to bear in mind that the law was enacted pursuant to the constitutional provision vesting all egislative power in the Congress, and explicitly authorizing it 'to provide for the general welfare of the United States.'

"Consolidation of Gains."

Discussing the legislative program, Creel says:

"Undoubtedly a major effort during the first part of the second term will be the consolidation of gains."

Nothing is closer to the President's heart, Creel says, than the TVA and adds: "The President has not budged, and will not budge, from his faith that taxes should be levied in proportion to the ability to pay and in proportion to benefits received. * * *

"The cry of 'dictatorship' leaves him unmoved save a passing contempt for its silliness," he says.

New Efforts Made To End Sea Strike

San Francisco, Nov. 29 (AP).—New efforts to obtain peace conferences between offshore shippers and striking maritime unions were started today by Federal officials as other Government agents made final arrangements for dispatching emergency food ships to Alaska.

The northern territory, cut off from normal commerce for a month by the coastwide strike, was assured two supply-laden vessels, chartered through Federal action, would be en route this week.

Assistant Labor Secretary Edward F. McGrady turned his efforts toward negotiations between unions and the offshore or deep-sea operators after a fruitless peace conference between coastwide freight shippers and the Masters, Mates and Pilots Union.

Civil and World War Veteran, 90, Honored

Sterling, Ill., Nov. 29 (AP).—There'll be a hot time in the old town tomorrow night.

The whole community—plus a full complement of distinguished guests—has been invited to a party celebrating the nintieth birthday anniversary of Nicholas George Van Sant—called the only Civil War veteran who served in the trenches during the World War.

They've arranged a program of martial music, songs, speeches and a banquet at the municipal coliseum in honor of the old trooper who rode with the Ninth Illinois Cavalry in the conflict between the States and who carried coffee and doughnuts to the boys in the front line dugouts in France in the uniform of the Salvation Army.

Successor Is Sought For Van Sweringen

Cleveland, Nov. 29 (AP).—Two Midwestern capitalists, G. A. Tomlinson and George A. Ball, will confer here tomorrow and attempt to choose a successor to the late O. P. Van Sweringen as chief executive of the far-flung Van Sweringen Railroad and real estate interests.

Tomlinson, Cleveland shipping magnate, and Ball, Muncie, Ind., glass jar manufacturer, own all the outstanding stock of Mid-America Corporation, the top holding company which controls the vast railroad network.

Senator O'Mahoney's Proposal for Federal Incorporation Law Urged Many Times Before.

By Franklyn Waltman

There is nothing new fundamentally about Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney's proposal for a Federal incorporation law, which the American Federation of Labor at its Tampa convention ardently indorsed as a vehicle for imposing wage and working condition standards.

WALTMAN.

At some time or other since 1885 the leaders of virtually every element in the Nation have favored a Federal incorporation law—but with different ends in mind. And in some instances advocates of such proposals have become opponents when a new twist was given to the objective to be achieved.

Thus, we have had former Presidents Theodore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft and Woodrow Wilson urging a Federal incorporatoin law of some type. Thirty years or so ago such conservatives as John D. Rockefeller, John D. Archbold, Joseph Choate and Mark Hanna said kind words about the necessity for Federal incorporation.

And more recently such incongruous figures as former Senator Smith W. Brookhart, Richard Whitney, former president of the New York Stock Exchange, and Dr. Rexford Guy Tugwell have urged the wisdom of Federal charters for industrial and financial corporations engaged in interstate business.

The motives and objectives of these men, however, differed widely. In the beginning of discussions of Federal incorporation the compelling motive was the problem of regulating the railroads. In those early days the Interstate Commerce Commission did not possess the authority over the financing and organization of railroad corporations which that agency has today.

In the elder Roosevelt-Taft era, Federal incorporation was proposed primarily as an instrument to curb monopolies and prevent restraint of trade. During that period also, but with greater force subsequently, Federal incorporation was urged as the remedy for evils and abuses flowing from loosely drafted State laws which permitted stock promoters to defraud investors.

The latter objective also motivated proposals for Federal incorporation made in the early years of the depression. Mr. Whitney had that in mind, as well as the lack of uniform corporate and accounting practices throughout the country when he, speaking in Cleveland in February, 1933, suggested Federal incorporation. And then Federal incorporation of public utilities was proposed as a means of control in that field.

Dr. Tugwell, however, was not thinking of these ends, but rather of devices to reach his objective of a planned economy when he proposed in his book, "The Industrial Discipline," early in 1933, the feasibility of Federal incorporation.

He suggested Federal incorporation as the logical step, after driving "corporate surpluses into the open investment market" through the imposition of a tax on undistributed earnings, in his scheme to bring under governmental regulation new capital issues. The first step has been written into law—and now we are discussing Dr. Tugwell's second step in his plan to discipline industry.

The motive power for the current discussion does not come from an acceptance of Dr. Tugwell's program, but primarily from a desire on the part of labor leaders and legislators to enforce standards of wages and working conditions on a national scale and in a manner not repugnant to the Constitution and Supreme Court rulings—although doubt always has existed of the constitutionality of a compulsory Federal incorporation law.

It is interesting to note that the early proposals for Federal incorporation were of a voluntary or permissive character. The first official pronouncement of the Government favorable to a Federal incorporation or licensing law came in 1904 in the report of James R. Garfield, commissioner of corporations. He proposed that such incorporation should be compulsory on all corporations engaged in any activities beyond their home States.

But six years later, when President Taft and his Attorney General, George W. Wickersham, actively sponsored Federal incorporation, they favored "permissive" legislation; that is, legislation providing for the Federal incorporation of enterprises willing to submit to certain conditions and standards in order to escape from harassing and confusing regulations by State laws. Bills designed to carry out the Taft-Wickersham proposal were introduced in the House and Senate, but failed of passage, as have some two score or more basically similar measures.

In the 1912 campaign, however, when Theodore Roosevelt's Progressive Party declared for industrial regulation through Federal incorporation, Mr. Taft changed his attitude, declaring that "the proposal of the third-term party to control the trusts through Federal incorporation and regulation would create the most monstrous monopoly of power in the history of the world, a power as much greater, as much more autocratic than that of a Caesar or a Napoleon as the business interests of the twentieth century are greater, more dominant and far-reaching than were those of 2,000 or 100 years ago."

Believe it or not, a local newspaper the other day referred six times in one story to the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce as Mr. "Ripley" — not once as Harper Sibley, his correct name. Such is fame!

Federal Loans Fall as Private Credit Climbs

'Proper Basis' for Other Lending to Cut U. S. Aid, Jones Asserts.

By the Associated Press.

After pouring billions into industry, business and agriculture during the lean years of the depression, Government lending agencies now are tightening the purse strings on Federal credit.

A gradual decline in both applications and loans authorized has been under way for several months, a survey showed yesterday, with the multi-billion-dollar reconstruction corporation in the forefront of agencies restricting operations.

Federal lending through emergency agencies, including Government guarantees of private credit through the Federal Housing Administration, has totaled about $15,000,000,000.

To hand the job of meeting the Nation's money needs back to private sources, Chairman Jesse H. Jones, of the RFC has announced Federal credit will be "rapidly curtailed" with advancing recovery if other loans are offered on a "proper basis."

Already, records showed, Federal lending activities have fallen off, and fiscal experts predict further substantial declines will result from continuance of the present business upswing.

The Reconstruction Corporation, which was lending more than $150,000,000 monthly during 1933 and 1934, whittled its outlays to around $30,000,000 a month this year.

Another major lending agency, the Farm Credit Administration, also has shown a decline in activities since 1933. With applications for loans hitting a peak of 76,951 in October 1933, these gradually fell to 16,021 in October, 1935, and to 7,764 last month. The agency now has an uncxpended balance of $226,000,000.

The Public Works Administration has used only about one-fourth of the $300,000,000 appropriated for loans and grants by the last Congress, and the Home Owners Loan Corporation, after advancing about $3,000,000,000 on home mortgages, ceased lending entirely last June 12.

The FHA does not lend directly, but has insured about $1,200,000,000 of private home mortgage and modernization loans. Unless extended by Congress, the present Government insurance will expire next July 1.

Federation Pleads for Pay Increases in Keeping With Recovery.

"If industry is able to make such increases in dividend payments, clearly it has the wherewithal to lift workers' buying power."

The federation cited wage conditions in the following industries:

Cigarettes—In March, 1935, a total of 95.6 per cent of the workers received less than 72 cents an hour.

Paper boxes—In August, 1935, a total of 83.7 per cent of the wage earners received less than 70 cents an hour.

Automobiles—In September, 1934, a total of 56 per cent of the workers received less than 75 cents an hour. In 1934, 63.3 per cent received between 65 and 90 cents, the increase following NRA activities.

Steel—In March, 1935, 71.5 per cent of the wage earners received less than 75 cents an hour. In the first nine months of 1936 profits increased 200 per cent over the first nine months of 1935.

The federation concluded that in these four industries, 575,000 workers, or 63 per cent, received less than "the minimum wage necessary to support their families in health."

Auto Production Increases in Week

Detroit, Nov. 29 (AP).—Cram's Reports, Inc., estimated today that output of the automobile plants for the current week would total 104,283 cars and trucks, compared with 110,160 for the previous week and 93,995 in the corresponding week of 1935. It attributes the decline to the Thanksgiving Day holiday.

Ward's Automotive Reports places this week's output at 102,399 units compared with 116,125 last week and 83,549 for the comparable week of 1935. The analysis stated virtually all production between now and the end of the year would be absorbed by retail sales.

Flames Destroy Occoquan Home, Menace Village

Fire companies from Alexandria, Va., and the Lorton Reformatory yesterday were rushed to Occoquan, Va., when flames which destroyed the two-story frame home of Mrs. Susan Hixon threatened to spread through the village.

The fire, believed to have been caused by a defective flue, was fanned by a strong wind and fiery embers were carried to the roofs of adjoining homes. Alexandria fire officials sent two companies.

Neighbors carried a few of Mrs. Hixon's household belongings to safety before they were driven back by the flames. Damage was estimated at $6,000. The Village of Occoquan does not have a fire company.

War Refugees From Mongolia Flee Into China

Nomad Families Stream Into Frontier Town as Armies Mass.

By the Associated Press.

Kalgan, Suiyuan Province, China (Monday), Nov. 30.—Refugee Mongols—men, women and children driven from their nomad homes in western Chahar and eastern Suiyuan by the threat of war—streamed into this frontier town today within the lee of China's Great Wall.

They came on camels, in horse-drawn carts or afoot—stripped of their belongings and suffering from sub-zero temperatures and the hardships of heavy snow gripping northern Asia.

Many were without food but thankful to escape the reach of war which they asserted is certain to engulf the area they and their ancestors have occupied for centuries.

The majority of the refugees were hunters or small herd owners.

They told tales of hardships and said many of their countrymen in Chahar and Suiyman had been conscripted as soldiers or laborers to build roads for massing of the military.

The military took over, with little or no compensation, their camels, horses, cattle, sheep, furs and even motor cars, the fleeing Mongols asserted.

They said troops from Chahar, allegedly under Japanese leadership, were preparing to invade Suiyuan and that their force numbered an estimated 25,000 of Chinese and Mongols from Jehol, Manchuria.

Native officers led these troops, the refugees said, but they were assertedly under Japanese control and had Japanese military equipment.

It was stated also that 15,000 Chahar "bandits" and 3,000 Mongol cavalrymen were among the invaders.

The refugees said the irregular forces had declared a new "inner-Mongolian government" in western Chahar and that this "government" was "comprised of a Japanese majority."

Burleson Plan To Cut Election Gifts Studied

Proposal to Limit Donations to $25,000 Is Sent to President.

By the Associated Press.

Recommendations of a former Postmaster General for rigid restrictions on campaign spending were sent to President Roosevelt yesterday by Senate investigators.

Drafted by A. S. Burleson, onetime member of President Wilson's Cabinet, the plan would impose severe penalties on any person contributing more than $25,000 to a single political campaign. His proposal was submitted to the President, without comment, by the special Senate committee investigating expenditures during the last campaign.

At Mr. Roosevelt's request, the commmittee, headed by Senator Lonergan (Democrat), Connecticut, later will present its own program for curbing political spending.

Robert Jeffrys, committee secretary, said expenditures during the Presidential campaign had reached the unprecedented total of $13,000,000.

Several individuals, including one unnamed Senatorial candidate, contributed more than $100,000 each, the committee's preliminary investigations disclosed.

Burleson's plan would limit the total outlay of each party to $1,000,000, including all disbursements on behalf of Presidential, Congressional and Senatorial candidates.

The National Committees alone, of the Republican and Democratic parties, spent $7,400,000 and $3,400,000, respectively, in the last election, in addition to comparatively large expenditures by minor party organizations.

Jeffrys said that "serious flaws" in the present corrupt practices act include the "highly confusing" form in which expenditure reports are filed.

Committee employes indicated that their recommendations to the President and Congress probably would include:

1. A simplified form of reports.
2. A top limit on expenditures by both individuals and political organizations.
3. A permanent agency to study campaign spending, either a joint committee of the Senate and House, or an independent unit in the executive department.

They made it plain, however, that their findings will not be completed for several months. The committee will hold its next meeting during the second week of December.

Georgia Crowd Hunts Suspect After Shooting

Fugitive Wounds Officer During Arrest; Violence Is Feared.

By the United Press.

Athens, Ga., Nov. 29.—Posses numbering nearly 600 men tonight deployed through fields and river bottoms in search of a colored man who shot a policeman here today.

Authorities feared the possibility of mob violence should the fugitive be captured. Herman Stein, uniformed officer of the Athens police force, was near death in a hospital here with a bullet wound over his right eye.

Police said the man being sought is Willie Frank Daniel. He allegedly shot the 45-year-old officer with the latter's pistol after knocking him down in a fight.

Daniel was being sought as a suspect in a filling station robbery when Stein was shot. The officer had gone to the colored section with orders to pick him up.

Stein found Daniel hiding in a house and forced him to accompany him to the street. As he searched the man's clothes, Daniel knocked him down, drew the officer's pistol from its holster and shot him.

Doctors gave Stein virtually no chance for recovery.

Muttering crowds began gathering a few minutes after the shooting and posses were organized hurriedly to scour the countryside. Daniel was believed hiding in the fields or in river bottom undergrowth.

Boettigers Off To Jobs on Coast

New York, Nov. 29 (AP).—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt gave her blessing and parting advice to her daughter and son-in-law tonight as they headed direct to Seattle, where both will assume positions on William Randolph Hearst's newspaper, the Post-Intelligencer.

Husky, broad-shouldered John Boettiger, who becomes a publisher in his thirty-seventh year, preferred not to discuss for the present the future policies of the newspaper whose three-and-one-half-month strike was a major political issue in the Pacific Northwest during the Presidential campaign.

It has been definitely arranged for his wife, the former Anna Eleanor Roosevelt, to write for the "P.-I."

Presses of the 60-year-old newspaper began rolling today again for the first time since August 13.

Circus Was a Circus When John Ringling Was a Rookie, Oldest Big-Top Veteran Says

By Eugene Warner.

An old circus man laid down his pipe yesterday and uncorked a few tales about the days when a circus was a circus.

This old circus man is, what I mean, a real old circus man. He's the oldest in the country—so old, in fact, he remembers when John Ringling was a rookie and "everybody had to know how to jump over an elephant."

Of the past.

The gentleman is gray now and his numerous once-broken bones ache in the cold. He isn't so spry any more and his eyes are going bad on him.

But when he gets to thinking about a boyhood ride on an elephant alone and lost in the Ozark Mountains—

Or the time he was confronted by two uncaged leopards in his dressing room tent—

Or that other memorable split-second when a tight wire collapsed at a county fair with him on it and 80 feet up and no mat—

Then he's as excited as a kid of 10 at his first rendezvous with the extravaganzas of the Messrs. Ringling and Bailey, perhaps more so, the way these modern kids are nowadays.

Is District Resident.

The old circus man in question is Maurice Joyce, aged 76, and he lives here at the Portner Apartments.

When the old circus man was 14 he saw his first circus, and it took no cogitation to decide that the big top was his destiny.

Two years later he was a self-trained acrobat, called a "rube" by his colleagues, and begging the elephant trainer to let him ride Queen, the noblest pachyderm a boy ever straddled, as the circus moved from town to town.

He must have presented an odd sight whisking through an unprepared and unexpectant countryside on an elephant, waving to less fortunate lads hoeing corn or weeding onions.

Then, once in the Ozark—and the Ozarks were Ozarks in those days—he got lost.

Far ahead, pushing over mountain roads, darkness fell and he came to a fork in the road with no house in sight at which to ask the way. The natives were a wild and untamed crew who subsisted on corn whisky and feuds, and like some other storied mountaineers, did not care for trifles.

Master Joyce gave Queen a nudge with his foot under the left ear and she went left at a rapid rate. After an hour the young mahout discerned a house back from the road on a mountainside. On his arrival a quartet of baying hounds come tumbling out of the night and set upon Queen's feet with an inordinate amount of barking.

Queen did not care for trifles, either, and one by one she grabbed the hounds with her trunk and threw them into the adjoining fields.

Halloo the House.

With quiet restored, young Joyce began hallooing to the inhabitants of the house if any. He called and called for ten minutes and there were no signs of life.

Then a lantern lit inside and he could see someone coming to the door, carrying a long rifle. Queen was standing close to the door and Joyce on his vast mount was well above the top of the doorsill.

The door was thrown open and a shaggy mountaineer appeared—for a moment.

The mountaineer uttered a tremulous glub and fell over backward, dropping the rifle.

Joyce called down from on high not to be afraid, but he was out of sight behind the wall over the door and the mountaineer must have thought the elephant was talking to him, for he slammed the door doused the lantern and was heard no more.

That was one little experience.

Another was a meeting with the two uncaged leopards. Four of them escaped from their cage. Billy Burke, father of Billie Burke the actress, was a clown with the show and occupied the same tent with Joyce.

Joyce was just leaving the tent. Burke was behind him, his face covered with soap lather while washing off his grease paint.

Joyce saw the leopards and stood perfectly still. One passed him on one side and one on the other, and although they were snarling, their disagreeablenes seemed to be over some argument between themselves, for they hardly looked at him, for which he was duly thankful.

But Burke, when he got the soap out of his eyes, behaved differently. He did not stand still, but dived under the tent wall. The humor of this situation was considerably enhanced by the fact Burke had no pants on.

Of the present.

When last seen he was running through the incoming circus crowd pantless and panting. Joyce made all haste away from there, too.

Only one of the leopards proved recalcitrant. He had an old-time leopard field-day killing calves in a farmer's yard until the farmer, in great indignation and no little amazement, shot him.

The fall from an 80-foot tight wire was the handiwork of the Demon Rum. It happened at a county fair in New York.

Joyce had an old property man with him who was charged with fastening the guy ropes on his end towers firmly in the ground.

After asking twice if the guys were anchored, up the ladder Joyce went. It was late and the crowd was waiting. Up to the top of an 80-foot tower he climbed and stepped out onto the wire. It sagged.

Maybe It Needed Tightening.

Joyce called down to ask if everything was all right. His man replied that maybe the wire needed tightening a little, and that was done.

Once more High-wire Walker Joyce ventured out.

Suddenly he felt the wire begin to slack. He tried to run back to the towers for safety, but they, too, were slowly toppling. The anchors were giving way.

Then for a limitless second he tried to do something, when nothing could be done except fall.

He woke up in a hospital, both legs broken, his ribs crushed, and nose flattened against his face, and stayed there three months.

The man who caused the fall vanished, never to be seen again. "He was a very nice man, said Joyce yesterday, "except when he was drinking."

Duplicate Tax Of U. S., States Totals Millions

Treasury Survey Reveals Systems Overlap in Many Instances.

centration, eight States collecting about half of the motor vehicle registration and licenses, and about 45 per cent of the gasoline taxes throughout the period.

"In the fiscal years, 1934 and 1935, nine States collected 70 per cent of the total liquor excise taxes, license and liquor store profits."

The study pointed out that a substantial portion of the State tax collections were shared with local governments. More than half the States thus share the gasoline taxes.

Increasing prosperity, high tax rates, or both were indicated by the fact that State gasoline tax revenue increased 13 per cent in 1936 over 1935 and general sales taxes increasd 23 per cent. Liquor taxes grew 28 per cent.

President Roosevelt urged two years ago that a thorough study of duplicate taxation be made with a view of separating State and Federal tax sources wherever possible so that the burden might be distributed more evenly. The study has been going on for a year and a half with a view of recommending leigslation and possibly agreements between the Washington Government and the States.

While no definite time has been set by the President for the tax conference, it is possible that it will be held early next year and that officials of all the States will be invited. Legislatures of nearly all the States will begin their biennial sessions in January, when Congress also will be in session, thus simplifying the consideration of any legislation that may be proposed.

Rail Magnate's Brother, Penniless, Dies in Fall

Philadelphia, Nov. 29 (AP).—A man identified by relatives as Harry B. Lee, recently of New York, a brother of the late Elisha Lee, former vice president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, died today in a fall from the third floor of a Y. M. C. A. branch.

He had told Y. M. C. A. officials he was penniless and "waiting for friends," and sat up all last night in the lobby of the building. Relatives said Harry Lee once was wealthy, and 20 years ago managed his father's shipping business in Trinidad.

'Talking Sickness' Victim Improved

Memphis, Tenn., Nov. 29 (AP).—The stream of childish prattle that for two weeks has flowed almost uninterruptedly from the lips of 4-year-old Emmie Wilson slowed a bit today.

"The boy who can't stop talking" played with his toys and fingered a brand new necktie that helped divert him from his chatter.

His nurse said he slept six hours last night—his best rest in a long time.

"Emmie seems to be responding to treatment," the nurse said. "But there has been no diagnosis yet. Brain specialists are going to consult in a day or so."

Doctors at first pronounced him suffering from meningitis but later said a question mark as yet conceals the true diagnosis. The child suffered a slight stroke two weeks ago. It affected his face, one eye remaining open and one side of his mouth is drawn. The illness has wasted his once sturdy body to 20 pounds.

Only when sleep comes does the incoherent babbling cease.

Winter Unofficial As Yet, Says Seer

Boaz, Ala., Nov. 29 (AP).—A raw wind whistled through this north Alabama mountain town today, and the thermometer stood near freezing—but winter hasn't come yet.

Not until jolly Walter Cagle, 535-pound "Old Man Winter Himself," comes to town Wednesday will cold weather arrive officially.

Icicles may hang from the eaves, but for years the hardy Sand Mountain folk have not recognized winter until Walter lays in his fall supply of woolens.

This year he will get an extra supply of heavy clothes, for Walter sent word down from his Sand Mountain farm the section is in for an extra hard winter.

Walter, whose weather prophecies are highly respected in these parts, said the signs were positive.

Woman to Observe Her 101st Birthday At Waynesboro, Pa.

Waynesboro, Va., Nov. 29. (AP).—Quietly and "without fuss and bother," Mrs. Kate Coyner Palmer, member of a pioneer Shenandoah Valley family, will observe her 101st birthday at her farm home near here tomorrow.

At her request, there will be no celebration, no "fancy" dinner. Mrs. Sallie Leonard, an 81-year-old sister, will be a guest for the day, and in the afternoon there may be a few friends, relatives and neighbors to "come calling."

Mrs. Palmer is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Coyner. Of seven children, three are living, Mrs. Palmer, Mrs. Elonard and Mrs. Rebecca Coyner, 86.

Steel Head Claims 41,400 Enrollees

Pittsburgh, Nov. 29 (AP).—Philip Murray, director of the steel workers organizing committee, declared today his organization has been enrolling new members at the rate of 2,300 daily for the last 18 days.

At this rate almost 125,000 of the industry's 500,000 workers would now be members of the Amalgamated Associatoin of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, since the lieutenant of John L. Lewis clamied 82,000 members three weeks ago.

The workers committee, an auxiliary of the Lewis-sponsored Committee for Industrial Organization, which has split with the American Federation of Labor, lists its new members in the amalgamated.

Murray made the statement at a labor mass meeting in suburban Ambrdige.

Christianity Cited As War's Remedy

A return to Christian principles as a means of combatting the threat of war was urged yesterday by Bishop James E. Freeman, as he made his annual visitation to St. Philip's Church at Laurel, Md., to administer confirmation to a class of 15.

Blaming the present turbulence in Spain and the possibility of similar disorder in France on lack of religion, Bishop Freeman said that only a practical application of Christianity could stop war.

If widespread bloodshed is to be avoided, he said, nations and individuals alike must remember the parable of the Good Samaritan and attempt to put it into daily practice.

Heads' Absence Blocks 'Racket' Action by Bar

Plea for Bonding Inquiry Had Been Planned at Prince Georges.

Absence of all but one officer of the Prince Georges County Bar Association at a recent meeting prevented the making of a request by that group for an investigation of the alleged bonding racket, it was learned yesterday.

Incensed over published reports that two lawyers had been implicated by affidavits from Washington motorists, several members of the bar association were prepared to seek an investigation, it was revealed.

President T. Van Clagett and Vice President M. Hampton Magruder were absent from the session. Judge Clagett called later to explain his absence was due to illness.

Several other prominent lawyers in the county, including the two men implicated, also were absent.

Presiding in place of the president, State's Attorney Alan Bowie, who is secretary-treasurer of the association, adjourned the meeting without holding a business session.

The next meeting of the bar association will be held Friday at Upper Marlboro. Judge Clagett said last night he did not think the bonding investigation would be discussed.

"The bar association is very particular not to go out of its sphere," he said. "We don't take any action unless we are certain it's proper."

He said he had not heard anything about the two lawyers being involved in the Washington motorists' sworn statements.

Lewis Memorial Lays Cornerstone

Prominent officials of the Methodist Protestant denomination addressed 300 members and friends of Lewis Memorial M. P. Church at Kansas avenue and Fourth street northwest, when the cornerstone for a new church auditorium was laid.

Dr. James H. Straughn, president of the Methodist Protestant conference, gave the principal address. Also taking part were Dr. E. A. Sexsmith, president of the Maryland Annual Conference, who had charge of the exercises; Dr. G. W. Haddaway, general secretary of the board of missions for the denomination; Dr. Frank W. Stephenson, general secretary of the Methodist Protestant Board of Education; Dr. R. L. Shipley, editor of the Methodist Protestant Record in Baltimore, and Dr. Chesteen Smith, Washington minister.

The congregation, which is seven years old, now has a membership of more than 100. A recreation unit and chapel has already been erected. The new building will give the group a main church auditorium and enlarge the Sunday School unit. The Rev. J. A. Trader has been pastor of the congregation for the last year and a half.

Goods Sales Rise During October

By the Associated Press.

The Department of Commerce said yesterday a survey showed sales of goods by both manufacturers and wholesalers made substantial gains in October, compared with the same month in 1935.

The survey, made jointly by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and the National Association of Credit Men, also was said to show higher percentages of collections.

Total net sales of 542 manufacturers registered an increase of more than 17 per cent over the same month last year and, without adjustment for seasonal influences, of 4 per cent over the past September.

Total net sales of 1,146 reporting wholesalers increased about 15 per cent over October, 1935, and 3 per cent compared with September of this year.

Police Free 3 Held in Death Of Va. Woman

Coroner Says Fall Was Fatal to Resident of Falls Church.

Fairfax County police last night released three men held during the investigation of the death of Mrs. Agnes Hudgins, 52, Saturday night at her home on Fort Buffalo road, near Falls Church, Va., when Dr. C. A. Ransom, county coroner, termed her death accidental.

Dr. Ransom said that Mrs. Hudgins came to her death by a fall at her home, which caused a deep gash in her head followed by a hemorrhage in the brain.

Those who were detained during the police investigation were Charles E. Hudgins, 66, the woman's husband; George H. Pell and James F. Kenny, all of whom were in the house when the accident occurred.

Dr. Ransom said Hudgins told him that he and his wife quarreled Saturday night, that he had held her hands when she attempted to strike him and that when he released her hands she lost her balance and fell, striking her head.

Security Is Topic Of Winant Speech

New York, Nov. 29 (A.P.).—John G. Winant, former Governor of New Hampshire and chairman of the Social Security Board, said today the social security act would guarantee to the small wage earner a sense of security which the securities act attempts to bring to the small investor.

In the first of a series of radio forum hours, Winant and Mayor F. H. LaGuardia discussed "what the social security act means to employers and employes."

There is nothing in the act that needs to affect adversely the private pension plan of any company, Winant said, explaining many concerns operating private pension plans have announced they will let their benefits supplement those the worker is to receive from the Government.

Mayor LaGuardia saw the new social security legislation as "another great emancipation, freedom from misery, poverty and sorrow."

Elnora, Ind., Nov. 29.—State Police Sergt. Hubert Day announced today the capture of George Daffron, 30, of Vincennes, Ind. will-o'-the-wisp Midwest desperado, and a companion, Lillian Simpson, 22, of Middletown, Ohio, in a cornfield near here this morning.

Day said the pair was in a locked automobile and submitted to arrest without resistance. Daffron had bragged, Day recalled, he would not be caught alive.

Daffron is wanted in Cincinnati for a cafe shooting, in Indianapolis for the kidnaping of a woman and the theft of her automobile and in several small Indiana communities for burglary and robbery. He had eluded Midwest police since the cafe shooting October 27, escaping on three occasions from police raiding squads.

At Indianapolis Capt. Matt Leach of the State police would not indicate whether the Federal authorities would be asked to act against Daffron on the kidnaping charges. Federal agents there were noncommittal.

Sergt. Day said Daffron had "made a clean breast" of the crimes and had admitted kidnaping James Carter, 24, his wife, Wanda, and their small child two or three weeks ago and forcing the Carters to drive him as far as Texas to escape the authorities.

Blue-Blooded Hacker Favored Taxi Ball Over Mrs. Belmont's

Francis French, of Newport Frenches, Writes His Memoirs, Says News of Astor Marriage Was Like Gold Rush of '49 to His Family.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 29.—Francis O. French, of the Newport Frenches and father-in-law of John Jacob Astor 3d, said today he thought the annual ball of the Amalgamated Taxi Association, Inc., was "much more interesting than the ball Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont invited me to in Newport about the time I was starting my business career."

French drove a taxicab in New York City to replenish his dwindling family funds.

"My finances were at rock bottom," he recounted in a magazine article in which he revealed that his career as a writer brought as much disfavor from his family as did his job as a taxicab driver.

The father of the former Ellen (Tucky) French said Astor tried to persuade him not to write his reminiscences of Newport life and quoted Astor as saying:

"If you do write a book, you may be sure of one thing: The parlor maids will read it, but the chauffeurs won't."

"My family, the Frenches and the Le Roys with their relatives by birth and marriage—the Tucks and the Vanderbilts—did not approve of my career as a chauffeur. No more, my son-in-law told me, did they like the idea of my writing my autobiography."

French said "Tucky" confided in him, rather than in her mother, from whom he had long been divorced, during her love affair with the Astor heir.

Commenting on a letter he received from the youngest sister of his father, announcing her engagement to Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt in about 1900, he said:

"The news that a Vanderbilt was about to be matrimonially lassoed proved to be about as stimulating to the French family as the discovery of gold in California to the Forty-Niners. The Vanderbilts had money, but the French family could trace its ancestry in New England back to 1636."

Outsiders Barred At Zaharoff Rites

Vallangoujard, France, Nov. 29 (AP).—Sir Basil Zaharoff, international munitions merchant, was buried here today in the little chapel at his Chateaux Balincourt home in the presence of a few relatives and friends and employes.

The funeral was conducted with the same secrecy that characterized Sir Basil's life and outsiders were not permitted within the palace grounds.

The body arrived at the chateau shortly after midnight from Monte Carlo, where Sir Basil died Friday. It was buried beside that of his wife.

he linked with two recent Far Eastern border clashes.

Nearly every speaker has declared Russia's readiness to defeat all comers.

"We are not afraid of aerial armament by capitalist countries. We have forged our own powerful air fleet. In quality, quantity and morale it is the most powerful air fleet in the world," Krhipin proclaimed.

330 Per Cent Rise in 4 Years.

"A year ago Marshal Tukhachevsky reported to the seventh congress a 330 per cent increase in army aviation in four years. Today the number of planes is more than four times that in 1932.

"We have hundreds of new planes with a speed of 450 kilometers per hour. I am happy on behalf of the Red Air Fleet to report that our machines and men always are ready for action."

There are now 12,000 airplanes for war "capitalist" countries, he continued, and predicted that within the next two years there would be 18,000.

"That is a terrible figure. If during the whole World War Germany dumped on England, France and Russia 27,000 tons of bombs, today this amount would be transported in five flights.

"If the planes of German Fascists threatened our country, woe unto them. For the Soviets will unleash all its war weapons against them."

From Andrei A. Zhdanoff, Leningrad party leader, came the warning to Baltic countries to steer clear of Fascist intrigues against Russia.

"We in Leningrad are sitting at one of the windows looking abroad," he said. "Around us are a number of small countries which dream of big adventures or allow big adventures to manipulate on their small territories."

As an example, Zhdanoff named Finland, which he said "offers herself as a springboard for fascism. We are not afraid of little countries, of course. But if they do not mind their own business we may be compelled to open our window a little wider, and it will be just too bad for them if we are forced to call the Red army into defensive action."

Observers coupled this with repeated warnings by Commissar Voroshiloff that the Red army will meet the enemy "on territory from which he comes," and interpreted Zhdanoff's remarks as a warning to Finland and other Baltic states that they will be the battleground if war should be declared against the Soviet Union.

Goering Cites Nazi Arms.

Goslar, Germany, Nov. 29 (AP).—Germany is stronger than in 1914, Nazi Air Minister Goering told farm leaders gathered here today—"a mighty armed force protects the Reich.

"We no longer are as weak as we were in 1914 when he entered the World War with our armed forces," Goering declared.

Kidnap Racket 'Dead,' Hoover Tells Cochran

No. 1 G-Man Tells Sponsor of Bill 171 Persons Sent to Prison.

Kidnaping as an occupation in the United States has been smashed, according to a statement yesterday by J. Edgar Hoover, head of the G-men.

Furthermore, records in the Federal Bureau of Investigation show that those who engaged in it in recent years have been brought to justice. Hoover makes no mention of one case still unsolved.

His statement came in the form of a letter to Represetnative John J. Cochran, of Missouri, who, with former Senator Roscoe C. Patterson, of that State, was coauthor of the Federal kidnaping act and of the Federal extortion act.

The unsolved case is that of little June Robles, kidnaped in Tucson, Ariz., in 1934, and chained for days in a pit in the desert. G-men are still working on this case, however, and last week it was reported in Tucson that a solution was near.

Hoover's letter follows:

"Honorable John J. Cochran,
"House of Representatives,
"Washington, D. C.

"My dear Congressman:

"I have recently had occasion to review the statistical data recorded in the Federal Bureau of Investigation pertaining to convictions and sentences imposed under the provisions of the Federal kidnaping statute, sponsored by you in the House of Representatives, which was approved on June 22, 1932, and thought you would be interested in knowing the results obtained through investigations conducted under the terms of this statute.

"From June 22, 1932, to the present the Federal Bureau of Investigation has participated in the investigation of 72 cases involving actual kidnapings. As a result of these investigations, 171 persons have been convicted, receiving sentences totaling 2,229 years, 11 months and 4 days. In addition, 33 life sentences have been imposed, 4 death sentences and two individuals participating in a kidnaping were lynched. Three other individuals participating in kidnapings committed suicide, 6 kinapers were murdered by their associates or other criminals and 5 kidnapers were killed resisting arrest. I feel that the above statistics accurately reflect the benefits accruing to society through the enactment of the kidnaping statute which your foresight prompted you to sponsor in the House of Representatives.

"With kind personal regards, I am
"Sincerely yours,
"J. EDGAR HOOVER."

Coming to the Capital tomorrow with the editor are Commissioner Edward J. Parker, national secretary of the Salvation Army, and Lieutenant Commissioner E. I. Pugmire, head o fthe army in Southern States.

The newly organized Washington staff band, directed by Adjutant Albert Baldwin, will furnish music.

Chicago, Nov. 29 (AP).—Herman Trelle, Wembley, Alta., farmer, regained the wheat crown of the world today at the International Grain and Day Show, giving him a double "kingship." Trelle became the "oats king" yesterday.

The Peace River Valley farmer scored the wheat victory on his return competition after three years enforced retirement because of three previous wins.

Man Tells of Killing Brother in 1901

Chicago, Nov. 29 (AP).—The police held 64-year-old Charles Kohr today pending an investigation of his story that he slew his brother, Henry, in their home town of Belleville, Ill., more than three decades ago.

Kohr, given first aid Thanksgiving night by Police Sergt. William Murphy after he fell and cut his head, returned to central police station last night and asked for Murphy.

"Back in 1901 or 1902," he told the sergeant, "I committed murder. I killed my own brother, Henry, when he was only 14. Henry got a job in Peter Kircher's saloon in Belleville and I didn't want him to work in a saloon. He was so young. We quarreled and I hit him on the head with a stick. To my horror, I found I had killed him. I threw his body into a cistern. It was found 11 months later. No one ever suspected me."

At Belleville, the police said their records did not show a Kohr killing, but added they would make a further inquiry.

ultimately be defeated. Along with adequacy of land forces, therefore, the air force must be brought up to invincible strength.

Gradual Expansion Aim.

"Such a vast project cannot be achieved within a few years, and therefore the army must be satisfied with minimum expansion to begin with. As the power of the nation's aircraft industry is nurtured, gradual expansion should be effected.

"This seems to be the wisest course. But even the minimum will amount to several times the current strength. It must not be ignored, moreover, that the American army and navy have 4,000 planes and that the Chinese have an air force of 850 planes.

"The question is often asked whether arms competition will not result if the Soviet Union and Japan expand their armaments. The geographical position, traffic facilities and natural resources of the Far East, however, impose limits on the strength which the Soviets can put into the field in this part of the world and which they can replenish.

Recalls Other Soviet Foes.

"There are also the 4 division of the Finninsh army, the 3 of the Estonian, the 3 of the Latvian, the 30 of the Polish and the 21 of the Rumanian, totaling 61 divisions, which the Soviets must provide against along their borders. Nor can they forget the 36 German divisions in the rear. Even to keep peace and order at home requires a considerable force. These considerations show that enormous though their army is, the Soviets cannot increase indefinitely their Far Eastern strength.

"Though far advanced, there is a limit to the capacity of Soviet industry. The number of youths the army can recruit is also restricted. Infinite armament is impossible. Morevover, the Far Eastern army of the U. S. S. R. is far from home. It must develop extremely cold and barren wilds that are sparsely populated. The Japanese garrison, on the other hand, is supported by the 30,000,000 Manchurians and their vast and fertile territory.

"In the event of an arms race with the Soviets, there will be nothing to fear, therefore, if the Japanese maintain their strength and spirit at a certain level without regard for difficulties."

Magyar Chiefs in Vienna.

Vienna, Nov. 29 (AP).—Diplomatic circles tonight speculated as to whether Austrian and Hungarian support of the Japanese-German pact against communism would follow Vienna visits of three highest Hungarian officials.

The Hungarians, Admiral Nicholas Horthy, regent of his nation; Premier Koloman Daranyi, and Foreign Minister Koloman von Kanya, arrived today for what was officially described as a "courtesy visit."

capital again a clear target for Fascist warplanes after a day of rain.

Government planes were in the air at dawn, however, to patrol Madrid and suburban territories. One Fascist squadron flew over the city to reconnoiter but no bombs were dropped.

Socialist troops were reported attacking on the Burgos front today, at northern Oviedo, in the Guadarrama Mountains northwest of the capital, and near Talavera de la Reina—Fascist stronghold in the southwestern sector.

Advices from Gijon said Asturian miners, consolidating forces after steady advances the past few days, were to march in vigorous offensive against the provincial capital on the Bay of Biscay.

Dispatches from northern Santander declared government columns from that province were within 40 miles of Burgos and had captured Soncillo with 200 Fascist dead. One mortar and three machine guns were captured.

when Mr. Roosevelt arrives, and salute him as "a fellow democrat."

Rehearsals of tomorrow's elaborate ceremonies were held throughout the city. Seldom has the pending arrival of a visitor produced greater popular manifestation.

Eighteen airplanes, which will greet the Indianapolis, roared over the city in a practice drill and 10,000 troops, who will flank the parade line from the docks to the American embassy, received last-minute instruction.

Following the lead of President Augustin P. Justo, the populace, from school children to agricultural workers, was ready with an official program displaying the wealth and development of one of the largest Latin cities in the world.

1,200,000 to Greet President.

Tonight the wide avenues and plazas in the city's center were illuminated with flood-lights which were concentrated on American and Argentine flags. Lights also flashed on Government House, the new home of the foreign ministry, the National Congress and other buildings.

Mr. Roosevelt will land at the port in North Basin. President Justo and his full cabinet will greet the North American party aboard the Indianapolis, and accompany Mr. Roosevelt's party to the embassy.

Influx of thousands from the back country assures a crowd of 1,200,000 to see Mr. Roosevelt's arrival.

Diplomats, who will attend the conference, including Secretary of State Cordell Hull, already are here and some of them will be in the reception committee which meets Mr. Roosevelt.

From the cruiser, the Presidents of United States and Argentina will ride through principal streets in a decorated carriage, accompanied by the crack San Martin Grenadiers, Argentina's famed mounted regiment.

Will Ride in Carriage.

Troops will be two deep along the entire line of march, which passes through the heart of the capital along the Avenida de Mayo.

After a brief visit at the American Embassy, Justo will return to Government House, and Mr. Roosevelt will return his call, again riding the streets in a horse-drawn carriage with Foreign Minister Saavedra Lamas.

Mr. Roosevelt will remain in Buenos Aires until the morning of December 2.

Crowds watched the erection today of a large reproduction of the United States coat of arms across the street from the American Embassy. The emblem, 60 feet in diameter, bears the inscription "E Pluribus Unum" in electric lights.

Prayers for Success.

New York, Nov. 29 (AP).—The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America cabled prayers of success for the inter-American peace conference today to Secretary of State Hull at Buenos Aires.

The cable, carrying the best wishes of 23 of the largest church units in the Nation, said in part:

"The efforts of the United States in calling this conference is a commendable example of the kind of initiative this country should take in international affairs. * * * It is our earnest hope * * * that our Government will extend this policy of consultation and good neighborliness to all nations."

Loyal Troops Quell Ecuador Revolt Attempt

Dictator Federico Paez Retains Firm Hold; 50 Dead, 100 Hurt.

By the United Press.

Quito, Ecuador, Nov. 29.—Dictator Federico Paez remained tightly in control of the government today after an unsuccessful revolt of an artillery regiment in which 50 persons were killed and 100 wounded.

Loyalty of three regiments, which defeated a rebel attempt to raid the presidential palace and seize Paez, won the day for the government.

Interior Minister Aurelio Bayas, who was seized early in the revolt, was freed unharmed by government troops.

Paez' suppression of Communists and Liberals and his control over foreign exchange, which has caused hardship to some businesses, were believed to have caused the revolt. Two similar uprisings in July and October were put down by quick government action. Leaders opposing the dictator's views were exiled.

Yesterday's battle started shortly after 4 p. m., when rifle fire began near the barracks of the Calderon Artillery Regiment.

Rebels, purportedly led by former President Louis Larrea Alba, sent a demand to Dictator Paez, demanding his resignation. He declined and ordered Defense Minister Col. Alberto Enriquez to quell the revolt.

While Paez remained in his palace, government troops forced the rebels to retreat to Ichimbia Hill, east of the city, where they made a last stand and were scattered after a four-hour skirmish.

It was understood the rebellious regiment would be disbanded.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Will Climate Cure Tuberculosis?

When a family is suddenly confronted with the rather disconcerting news that tuberculosis has fastened itself upon one of the household, the question arises, where and under what circumstances can recovery be made best? While there is no particular spot in the world which is positively curative, nevertheless there are some advantages in placing these patients under expert control at some distance from their homes.

Many individuals will not do well if they are in close contact with home affairs. Interest is maintained in the doings of family, friends and business associates, and there is thus sustained a type of mental alertness which is not conducive to absolute rest. On the other hand, if the patient is a few hundred miles away, co-operation with the rest program is more easily achieved.

Change Sometimes Beneficial.

There has grown up, however, in the public mind the idea that air laden with the odor of pines, or a very dry air, or a very warm atmosphere is essential, and all too frequently victims of the disease, poorly supplied with funds, will find themselves in some well known resort receiving inadequate care. They may then wonder why healing does not come.

A change of surroundings is sometimes beneficial, particularly if it is to a location in which the sick person is happy, contented and comfortable. Cases have been reported in which the best type of sanitarium care proved unavailing, but when the patient was transferred to a section where he had longed to live or to visit, improvement proceeded apace.

Every now and then some one with a mild infection will journey to a remote spot and rough it in a cabin in a mountain canyon. This may be termed the "ordeal cure." Those with great powers of resistance will get well; the majority will not unless the lesion is slight. I have known of many patients chafing under sanitarium routine who have sacrificed their lives through just such a venture.

Rest First Consideration.

More depends upon comfort than climate; more upon good food than fresh air; and far more upon rest. If one has to wait upon himself, even partially, the value of all healing factors may be dissipated quickly.

But high elevations are not an unmixed blessing. If the disease is active, with the patient running an afternoon temperature of 100 or above, it is unwise on the whole to subject him to a long train journey to the mountains, particularly if there is appreciable difficulty in breathing. The rarefied air will only increase the symptoms. This is also true if there is any dilation of the air sacs [emphysema] or asthmatic manifestation.

The essentials, by far, are skilled management and contentment. An attractive, well conducted sanitarium with expert medical attendants and nurses is an ideal situation.

"ALL THE FUN WAS GONE OUT OF LIFE"
says middle aged woman

Many women suffer from hot flashes, dizzy spells, nervousness and other annoying symptoms of the Change of Life. They get so blue and discouraged that life does not seem worth living.*

Mrs. Matushek

"All the fun was gone out of life," complains Mrs. S. Matushek of 10907 Edbrooke Ave., Chicago. For five years I was going through a very bad time. I was nervous, had terrible headaches, could not climb stairs and felt swollen. Your Vegetable Compound worked wonders for me. It is a great medicine for any time of life, but especially at the Change and before motherhood. My daughter Lucille used to faint at the office. Your medicine helped her and helped my daughter-in-law too."

"I Had Awful Hot Spells" says Mrs. Harry H. Price of 304 Nos Harrison Ave., Kankakee, Illinois. "The Vegetable Compound puts pep into me and makes my work easy."

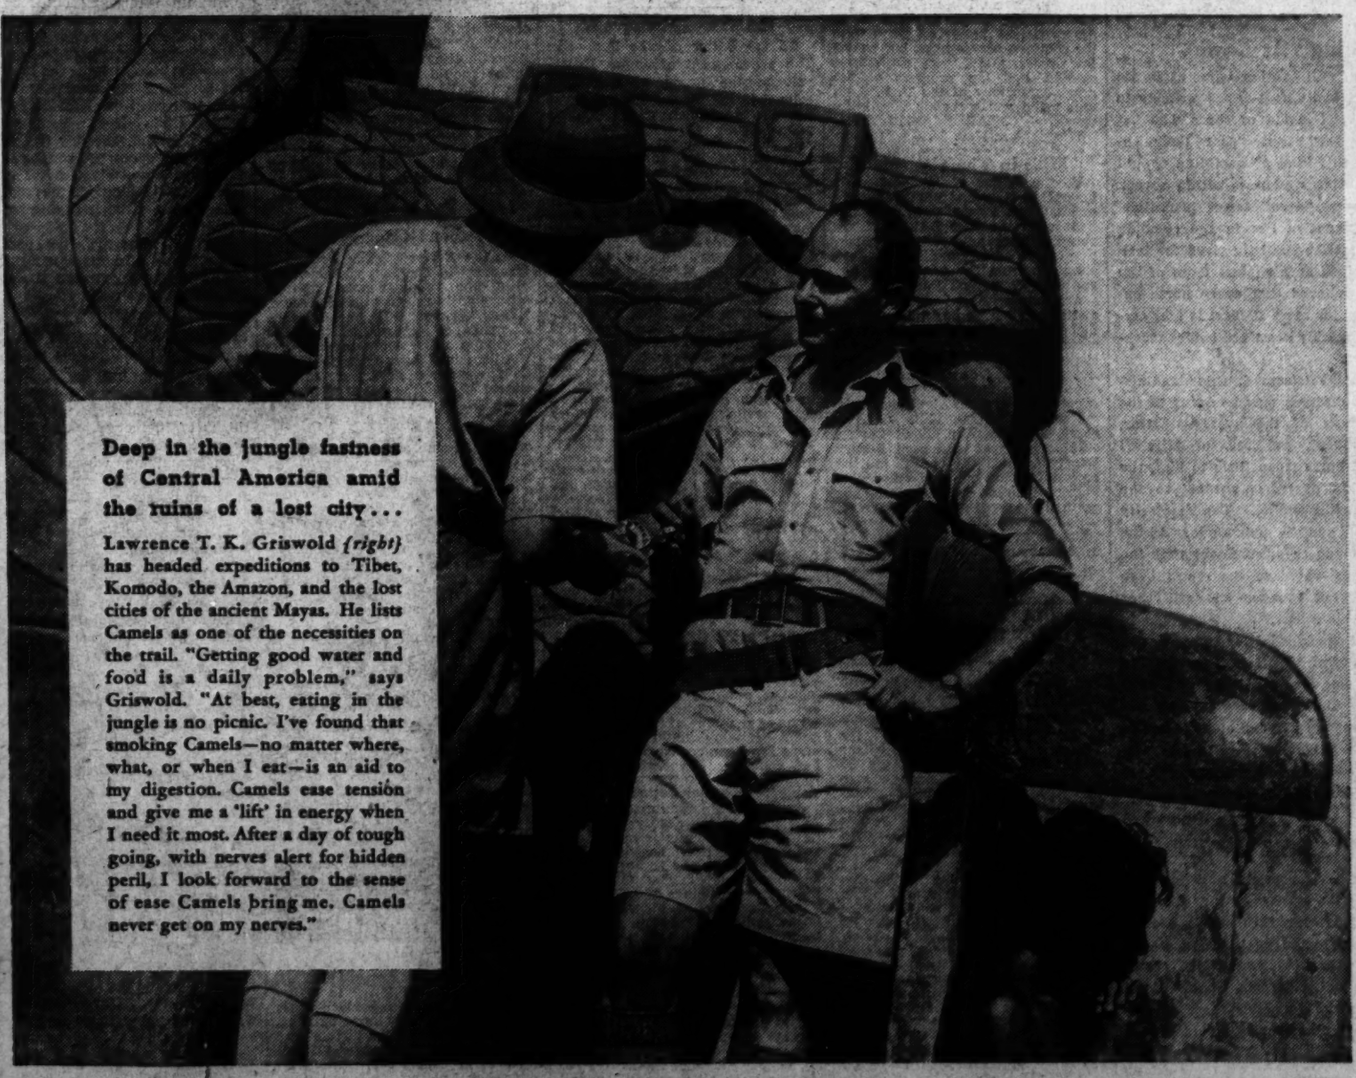
For Digestion's Sake ...Smoke Camels

Good digestion helps bring a sense of well-being and contentment

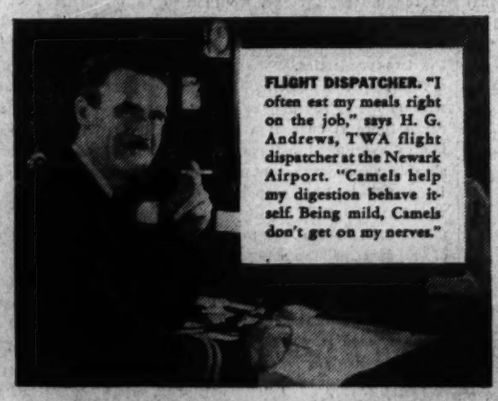
THE delightful effect of smoking Camels with your meals and afterwards has been proved again and again in the great laboratory of human experience. Explorers, champion athletes, people in hazardous outdoor work, as well as millions of men and women in homes and offices, find that Camels get digestion off to a good start and make the perfect ending to a meal. When you enjoy Camels, you are rewarded with an increased flow of digestive fluids—alkaline digestive fluids—so important to good digestion. And you can enjoy Camels as often as you like. Camels don't get on your nerves.



Deep in the jungle fastness of Central America amid the ruins of a lost city...

Lawrence T. K. Griswold {right} has headed expeditions to Tibet, Komodo, the Amazon, and the lost cities of the ancient Mayas. He lists Camels as one of the necessities on the trail. "Getting good water and food is a daily problem," says Griswold. "At best, eating in the jungle is no picnic. I've found that smoking Camels—no matter where, what, or when I eat—is an aid to my digestion. Camels ease tension and give me a 'lift' in energy when I need it most. After a day of tough going, with nerves alert for hidden peril, I look forward to the sense of ease Camels bring me. Camels never get on my nerves."

THIS CO-ED SAYS: "Camels set me right. Mental work often has an effect on digestion too," adds Miss Josephine O'Neill. "Camels are a big aid to digestion."



FLIGHT DISPATCHER. "I often eat my meals right on the job," says H. G. Andrews, TWA flight dispatcher at the Newark Airport. "Camels help my digestion behave itself. Being mild, Camels don't get on my nerves."

Where Teamwork Is Needed.

The hope of securing wholehearted cooperation in re-examining major commercial and industrial problems has been clouded by the obvious antagonism between Secretary Roper and Maj. Berry. When Mr. Roper was asked whether his Business Advisory Council has the same general objective as the forthcoming Berry conference, he replied that he did not know enough about the plans for that gathering to answer the question. Such ignorance on the part of the Secretary of Commerce as to the activities of the President's industrial co-ordinator can mean only that the two are working at cross-purposes.

The wordy battles waged by Secretary Ickes against the encroachments of the WPA, and the jurisdictional conflicts that have so frequently created hard feeling among Cabinet members are still fresh in the public mind. Now that the election is over, President Roosevelt will probably find personal intervention necessary to create a spirit of co-operation among the members of his official family. When they disagree as to policies, their differences should obviously be settled in private, not aired before the public.

In the present instance Secretary Roper may have excellent reason to believe that the Department of Commerce could get better results from an appeal to business men than a labor leader whose past record makes him unacceptable to many business groups as an official go-between. However, the question as to whether the Business Advisory Council or the Berry conference is to be the medium for facilitating co-operation between business and Government should be settled amicably behind closed doors. And, whatever the decision, the defeated party should recognize an obligation to further the plan or to step aside.

What is really needed is a more precise definition of the functions of our governmental agencies and departments, especially a line of demarcation between the regular establishments and special New Deal agencies. Several of the latter have been created to undertake activities that could be discharged much more effectively by the permanent departments.

True To A Public Trust.

A sense of social responsibility as commendable as it is rare is being manifested by judges of the Municipal Court. A week ago five judges of this bench met with representatives of legal and civic groups to work out plans for the establishment of a small claims court for Washington. More recently judges functioning in the Police Court have set out to learn by first-hand contacts the conditions prevailing in penal institutions to which they sentence offenders.

Judges occupy a unique position in the life of any community. Being the human agents through whom the law is applied to individual cases, they have a rare opportunity to assist in the improvement of procedure and the elimination of conditions that may make routine law enforcement a bitter absurdity.

It is especially notable that the movement to set up a "poor man's court" in the District should be sponsored by a judge who in his daily activities frequently sees the ends of justice defeated because of its cost. If Judge Cayton is able, with the aid of legal groups and other members of the municipal bench, to inaugurate informal proceedings under which any man can have his petty grievances adjudicated, he will render a truly significant community service.

Police Court judges are not required to inspect the workhouse and jail where they send petty criminals and drunks for punishment and, if possible, rehabilitation. But the fact that they are personally delving into conditions at these penal institutions greatly strengthens public confidence in their ability to apply the law constructively. Moreover, their visits are once more centering public attention upon the deplorable overcrowding and lack of segregation at Occoquan as well as Lorton.

It is through inquiries of this sort, followed by practical suggestions of reform, that the administration of justice is lifted above blind punishment for human frailties to understanding treatment of social maladjustments.

Spain And The League.

Embarrassing as it may be to the League of Nations at this time to take official cognizance of the thorny Spanish problem, there is none the less abundant evidence to justify the claim of the Madrid government that the struggle in the Iberian peninsula can no longer be regarded as a purely domestic matter.

Indeed if the Spanish government had not been receiving rather more than normal material aid from Russia it would probably have invoked the Covenant before this. For the struggle that has been going on in Spain since last July is now much more than a civil war. In a very real sense it has become an international war waged within the confines of that nation. And with each passing day the purely domestic aspects of the struggle have been overshadowed by a life-and-death combat between armed political philosophies using Spain as their battleground.

Soon after the uprising began, it became apparent that the Spanish civil war might very easily develop into a European conflict. It was to prevent such a calamity that France, with the active support of Great Britain, proposed the nonintervention agreement. With Germany not a member of the League, with Italy refusing to participate in League activities as long as its conquest of Ethiopia went unrecognized, the Paris and London governments were loath to employ the League's machinery to achieve their wholly admirable purpose of isolating the Spanish struggle. Thus it was that the center of international activity, so far as the Spanish crisis was concerned, was shifted from Geneva to London.

It was an experiment that failed. The nonintervention agreement has been honored more in the breach than the observance. For face-saving purposes, the committee of neutrals at London declared nonproven charges that Portugal, Italy, Germany and Russia had violated the "hands off" agreement. But this action has deceived nobody. Without the continuing aid of his Fascist allies, Gen. Franco would probably have got nowhere. And it is almost equally certain that had it not been for the support provided by Russia, the loyalists would not have been able to hold off the rebels at Madrid as long as they have.

Recently Italy and Germany threw off the mask of neutrality by recognizing the Burgos junta as the regular government of Spain. Now Foreign Minister del Vayo charges that one of these powers is "prepared to collaborate with the rebels in naval, military and air operations." If this is true, the case for League intervention is incontrovertible.

The French and British governments, desperately anxious to prevent the spread of the Spanish war, appear to be willing to contemplate even the prospect of such open military intervention without interference. But such attitude is tantamount to an admission that Spanish sovereignty has ceased to have any meaning and that Spain has become a colony of the Fascist nations.

Against such defeatism the Spanish government naturally protests. Now it demands that the Council be summoned to consider the Spanish crisis as one that comes within the purview of Article XI, namely as one "affecting international peace" and "the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends."

Of the legitimacy of this appeal there can be little doubt. However disconcerting it may be to Great Britain and France to bring the Spanish crisis before the bar of nations, that is where it belongs. Geneva may be able to contribute nothing positive to solution of the Spanish problem. But it can certainly gain no laurels by dodging responsibility in what has clearly become "a threat of war" and therefore "a matter of concern" to the League.

A Costly Municipal Center.

A bill to permit sale of the District Building to the Federal Government has been ordered drawn by Commissioner Hazen. Two squares of the site reserved for the city's Municipal Center, as yet only in the blueprint stage, would also be included in the transaction. Mr. Hazen mentions $9,000,000 as a fair price for the two properties.

Because the District Building stands within the Federal "triangle" and because there is current a loud demand for more Government office space, it is a reasonable assumption that Congress may be interested in the proposal. Mr. Hazen visualizes application of the sum which might thus be realized to the construction of a part of the Municipal Center—at least enough to provide new quarters for the District administration offices and a new police headquarters. That both are sorely needed is unquestioned by any who have investigated.

Whether or not Mr. Hazen's plan succeeds, its appearance at this moment is particularly timely. The financial obligations of the Federal Government toward the District are just now under consideration by a special committee which is scheduled to report to the next Congress. Few better demonstrations could be found of the extra demands placed on the city because it is the Nation's Capital than the plans for the Municipal Center. Though now in a state of revision, these plans originally called for an expenditure of approximately $20,000,000.

For a city the size of Washington this is a princely sum, representing nearly half the annual budget. No doubt the cost of the revised project will be considerably less, but the civic halls of the Capital City will be expensive in any event. To be situated on or near Constitution avenue, they must keep tone with the elaborate Archives Building and new Department of Justice nearby. In this and many other respects, the obligation of the Federal Government to assist the District is plain to see.

The Cost Of Procrastination.

After December 31 States which have failed to enact unemployment insurance laws will lose their chance to get credit for 90 per cent of the Federal levies due on 1936 pay rolls under the social security act. In view of this financial inducement to prompt action, it seems surprising that only 16 States and the District of Columbia have so far qualified to receive the benefits of the pay-roll levies. Since employers in States without such laws will be compelled to pay in any case, no competitive advantage will result from nonaction.

The delay in a majority of the States has probably been due to a belief that the Supreme Court would declare unemployment insurance laws to be an unconstitutional deprivation of property without "due process of law." This inference is strengthened by the fact that quite a number of States have been galvanized into action following the decision upholding the New York act, and are hoping to pass legislation before the end of the year.

In some States, such as Maryland where discussion and study of unemployment insurance proposals have been extended over a considerable period, last-minute efforts to qualify for tax credits do not necessarily mean that the resultant law will be a product of careless drafting and inadequate planning. But in other cases, State executives debating whether to summon legislatures into special session with a view to rushing through some ill-digested unemployment insurance law would be well-advised to pause. The few remaining weeks of 1936 do not allow adequate time for working out new proposals and submitting them for approval to the Social Security Board.

Since there has been ample time for action, it is an open question whether Congress should be urged to lengthen the period during which the States may qualify to share the proceeds of the 1-per cent tax on 1936 pay rolls. Certainly no encouragement should be given to prolonged delay by advancing the "deadline" to 1938. However, it would probably do no harm and would result in more equitable treatment of taxed employers if the procrastinating States were given some additional leeway—perhaps six months—in which to obtain their share of the receipts by passing unemployment insurance laws. If it were plainly understood that further favors could not be expected, the inducement to act promptly would be two-fold—first, to establish claims for the 1-per cent levies on the pay rolls of this year, and, second, to qualify for obtaining credits against the 2 per cent tax imposed on 1937 pay rolls.

Even though there is no assurance that Congress will approve any such change, it would be folly for any State to proceed in haste to enact unemployment insurance legislation. It is better to risk forfeiture of the pay-roll taxes as the price of delay than to act precipitately upon such a complicated matter. The pay-roll taxes were undoubtedly intended to force passage of State unemployment insurance laws but they were not designed to put a premium upon hurried and careless legislative procedure.

"Fixing" At Bowie.

Discovery of still another horse at Bowie with a sponge in its nose seems scarcely to perturb the local legion of those who bet regularly on the races. That their enthusiasm for this kind of gambling should hold up even after five horses within a week have been found "fixed" seems incredible. A partial explanation lies in the common assumption that the publicity given the incidents is safe insurance against more of the same. It is believed that every horse entered in the major races at least is now certain to be thoroughly examined before reaching the barrier.

A more important factor in this bland disregard for crookedness may be found in the sheep-mindedness of the average bettor. Past performances, pedigree, or physical condition of a horse mean little to him, the wide circulation of "form sheets" to the contrary notwithstanding. The majority follow the odds and the odds alone. As the crowd goes, so go they, confident that the mysterious ones who lead the crowd have full knowledge of sponges and all other gambling considerations.

Owners and track officials, however, are not so complacent. While not pretending that the sport has ever been lily-white, they still are aware that even horse racing can stand only a certain amount of defamation. Bowie had the only meet east of the Mississippi last week, and this was one of three in the entire country. Fans everywhere, accordingly, had their eyes fastened on the Maryland track.

Though it is apparent that the reports of crookedness have surprisingly little effect in discouraging the average bettor, this does not apply to all track enthusiasts. Least of all does it apply to the wealthy sort whose interest leads them to underwrite costly stables and breeding farms. Should these men be alienated from the sport by recurring "fixing," horse racing would indeed fall on evil days.

"I'd like to see more riots on college campuses," declares William Allen White. It may be possible, but it would seem that the tailors already are doing their worst.

Just A Little Bit Of Marxism.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I should very much like to see this letter printed in your paper, but I know you will not print it. The truth, especially when it's beneficial to the common people, is never published in the lying capitalistic press, such as yours.

Your cartoon on page 6, and the editorial, "Stalin's Constitution," in your paper of November 27 are just as lying, just as falsifying, and just as unfair as Hearst's press is against any progressive measure.

First, you smart alecks must learn that communism and fascism are just as much apart as day and night; that fascism is dictatorship, degenerated from the most insane, bloodthirsty, desperate capitalism—the capitalism which is so desperate it must resort to open, armed terror in order to keep the hungry masses from destroying it; that communism is not dictatorship but democracy, the greatest democracy the world has ever seen.

If you knew just a little bit of Marxism you would know that this is the natural process of socialism. Stalin has nothing to do with the U. S. R. R.; it is the people. Out of 175,000,000 people, 150,000,000 voted there last year by a genuine, secret Australian ballot, the same as we vote here.

The Soviet Union has not changed its principles one whit since its beginning in 1917. It is running according to the great teachers and labor leaders as Marx, Lenin, Luxemburg, Engels, Liebnich, Debs, etc. The common people in U. S. S. R. are even now better off there than the common people here, but wait a few years more, you capitalistic stooges, and the progress of the great democracy of the U. S. S. R. will make you eat your vile, lying words. CHARLES DARLING.

"Milk In The Cocoanut."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation and delight with the best feature of the many comprising your newspaper. I refer to the grandiloquent expressions from the pen of the one and only Westbrook Pegler.

Any one with an ounce of gray matter can see he has guts—and by that I mean the gray matter characteristic of true Americanism—his contributions to the lives of those living today. I can not adequately express my feelings toward this wonderful narrator of truism.

I read Edwin B. Hill, D. Lawrence, Jay Franklin, Boak Carter, et al., also hear and read Walter Winchell, but the milk in the cocoanut is the one and only West Pegler. He is neither for nor against; he speaks the true facts which we so seldom hear today and which is something to be proud of in this tempestuous age.

An Old Person's View.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In reply to the article published in The Post of November 22, regarding the old-age pensions: It is very true that there are some men here at the Home for the Aged and Infirm who are afflicted, feeble in mind and so badly bent with old age they need someone to look after them. There are certain cases who need someone to look after them, as they could not care for themselves outside of here, and this is the best place for them in their feeble condition.

On the other hand there are men here in this institution who have reached the age limit of 65 years required by law and are eligible for pensions—men who are strong and healthy and able to do a day's work. If $30 per month were offered to them they would jump at it and accept it willingly. They could better their living conditions on the outside of the place called Home CLIFF ALDER.
Washington, Nov. 23.

On James Roosevelt.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The appointment of James Roosevelt to the grade of lieutenant colonel in the Marine Reserves was not in accordance with standard procedure.

If his professional and physical qualifications are admitted, there remains the question of how and why he receives a rank far in advance of his years and far higher than that granted to men who have long served actively and diligently in peace and in war. The usual candidate for a reserve commission is started at the lowest rank and it is only in unusually exceptional cases of rare specialists that higher ranks are granted. A parallel for this case cannot be cited from the records, and I know that there never was a case of immediate duty with pay following an appointment. It is unfair to those who work and study to hold petty commissions, and it certainly will further reduce their morale. There is no technical nor professional justification for it all.

This country is shot through with lack of morale, lack of discipline and above all by a dreadful increase in bad taste. Let us make a start right here and let this young man play the game the same as we bona fide soldiers do.
LEROY GAINES.

Another Southern Woman.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Today I read with pleasure and appreciation Arthur M. Sheppard's defense of "Gone With the Wind," written in answer to "Southern Woman's" letter of November 21, saying all editions of the book should be consigned to a bonfire. He expresses my own summing up of a very remarkable novel better than I could. I agree with him heartily, that it is less sexy than the average best seller or magazine story.

My aunt who is 83 and a Southern lady of culture and refinement, thoroughly enjoyed the book. Having lived through the Civil War and the Reconstruction period that followed it, and having lost two brothers in action she is well fitted to criticize.

Minor inaccuracies amused her. They had, she says, no bedsprings in those days. Beds were laced across with rope. Kerosene lamps were rare, the waltz had not come in. Ruffled shirts had gone out and best shirts were pleated. Scarlett O'Hara would not have used such a modern expression as "that's that," nor, raised by Ellen, could have said under any circumstances, "a passel of brats"—a distinctly "poor white trash" expression.

"Southern Woman" while condemning "Gone With the Wind," probably avidly reads the daily installments of our international historical—or one day will be—royal romance, "Gone With All Discretion," which proves Mr. Sheppard's assertion, "What a large part sex plays in life."

She should re-read "Gone With the Wind" for its history, its powerful indictment of all war. She might learn a great deal that she skipped while seeing only coarseness and vulgarity and the "sex stuff," to which she so wrongly attributes its unprecedented sale.

Athens Geography.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The story in The Post of November 26 of the young woman who so nonchalantly mixed up a night club, "Wally," Edward VIII, cocktails, the Acropolis of Athens and the blue Aegean is a bit perplexing.

Athens is 5 miles from the coast. So I wondered how the "surging waters lapped the beach almost at the edge of the dance floor" of a night club in Athens. But when "surging waters" start out in search of a night club around which they wish to do some sentimental "slapping," I suppose they may be permitted to surge inland to any desired distance.

Then it was hard for me to understand how, without "missing a dance," Edward and Wally "strolled out onto the beach" and "then came back to the dance party." That was fast foot work—a 10-mile stroll without missing a dance or a cocktail.

It might help clarify matters if we could have a map with heavy, black crosses marking the positions of "Wally," the cocktail, the surging waters, and the night club.

View Of The Chamber.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The United States Chamber of Commerce calls for the ending of Federal work relief and predicts the gradual absorption, by industry, of the unemployed.

If its prediction comes true, that will automatically end work relief, and in the best possible way. But, apparently, that is not what the chamber wants. It wants the Government to discharge those on work relief, so that industry may hire as many or as few of them as it wants and at its own price. This, of course, will be lower than the substandard wages on which those on work relief now are existing, leaving those not so hired to starve or to exercise their constitutional freedom of contract to hire themselves out at wages lower than even a bare subsistance level, thus further depressing the general wage level. Of course, the chamber is careful not to call a spade a spade, but that is esentially what it means.

Reactions To Lord Marley's Address

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The pro-British propaganda with which this country has been deluged for the past 15 years seems to have reached its limit in the address of Lord Marley before the Town Hall. The instructions he gave us on that occasion were to the effect that the United States should reverse its settled and honor-bound policy about the Philippines and form an alliance with Great Britain to overawe Japan and control the Pacific.

What this really means the discerning hardly need be told. The American Army and Navy are to destroy Japan that Britain may be rid of a competitor that is crowding her from the markets of the Far East and from the world's carrying trade. And, next, we are to violate our solemn covenant with the people of the Philippines lest the example of a free and independent nation in the Orient should incite India and Malaya to fresh revolt and so endanger the British Empire.

The Congress of the United States has determined the course of this country as to the Philippines and we submit that it is intolerable for this visitor to undertake to tell Congress what it should do. And we remind him that after 700 years of hideous misrule in Ireland, Great Britain is in no position to instruct other countries as to their treatment of minority populations. We suggest that before we are afflicted with any more of this tutelage, Great Britain should attempt to atone for the monstrous wrongs she has committed in Ireland, India, Egypt, and wherever her flag of conquest and exploitation has gone.

And we again remind our fellow Americans of the deadly peril that lies in any departure from our safe and sane American doctrine of no alliances with any other power, whether to pull its chestnuts out of the fire, to sustain a blood-marked imperialism or any other purpose. If we actually believe in the neutrality we profess, let us be most on guard against the quarter whence it is now most threatened, which is the snare of any form of degree of Anglo-American alliance.

Britain's desperate need of such a partnership to restore her dissolving prestige and save her tottering empire must be obvious enough when to achieve it she is willing to trample upon all precedent and all barriers of tradition and marry her King to an American woman.

November Nocturne

Harriet Smith Hawley in the Christian Science Monitor.

NOVEMBER twilight is early. A smoky gray sky suddenly flushed by a pale red afterglow. The trees bare of leaves revealing even the most delicate twigs in the burnished light. A hushed, brooding silence. Beauty in every form and line. Leaning corn shocks encamped along the skyline. An unpainted old barn looking black across the valley. North wind marching the dry leaves of our hilltop on their restless journey. Tuning the needles of our two tall pines to the music of the night.

Standing by the window until night's curtain falls. And a star comes. Then turning to tend the fire. To put on another apple stick. Waiting to watch it catch. To smell its fragrance. Apple wood like frankincense. To feel its glow as the room brightens.

Spreading the cherry table with the blue cloth. Putting on the blue luster dishes and the thin old silver spoons. Initials H. H. Harriet Holmes. My grandmother's spoons inherited from her aunt because of her name.

• • • •

A simple supper. Fresh country eggs baked with white sauce and cheese. Home-made rye bread and ginger cookies. Cinnamon-flavored apple sauce served in glass dishes shaped like a leaf. An aromatic whiff of late autumn from the centerpiece of bayberries and pine cones.

The table removed. Fire now briskly snapping. The ancient mantel clock with its painted willows below the face, striking with quick precise stroke, the hour of eight.

Sitting down in the Sleepy Hollow chair to contemplate the crackling wood. Knowing the close companionship of loved ones. Discovering at the close of day one's self. Taking stock of inner resources. Happy in the atmosphere of home. Glad not to have to sally forth on pleasure bent. Valuing contentment as that better choice.

Perusing the newspaper. Reading more than headlines. A long evening ahead. Talking over world events. Reading aloud an editorial, "Up Ship." Exclaiming over the prospect of regular Atlantic air service.

Whither? We asked ourselves. Not ours to answer. Progress to be unfolded. Ours to approach with faith.

Getting out the corn popper. Kneeling before the fire. Liking the pop of the kernels as they flower into white. Fruit of the fields to munch as we take up the evening's adventure with books.

• • • •

Standing before the long shelves colorful with the bright bindings of the new, dignified with the more somber shades of the classics. Noting the bound volumes of old magazines. Dipping into their contents. Smiling at the quaint illustrations. A book review of "Evangeline." Walt Whitman's "Prayer of Columbus." More prophecy than he knew:

Shadowy vast shapes smile through the air and sky,
And on the distant waves sail countless ships,
And anthems in new tongues I hear saluting me.

Henry James' "Washington Square." Thoughts reaching out to touch the delights of a charmed yesterday.

And then reaching out for the new. A slender volume of verse on the table, "A Further Range." Glimpsing the stars with feet on the ground. Taking with me as I mount the stairs for my room under the spreading great oak, Robert Frost's wisdom set in beauty.

The light out. Feeling the sharp air blowing across the counterpane. Hearing the whisking leaves, a belated acorn falling on the roof, a hound in the distance baying across the knolls.

Warmer, tomorrow, the prediction. There is Indian summer yet. And the hunter's moon is rising. To cherish November.

A Word For The Women

That recently publicized Japanese custom of turning the household over to the husband one day a year may not be bad. The more one thinks of it, the more one is disposed to believe that it is based upon something which goes far deeper than the mere idea of Japanese housewives escaping a day of housekeeping, that it is more vital than a day of leisure for the Japanese women.

You, Mr. Man, with your job downtown, with your day in an office or behind a counter, going home at night expecting a pat here and a pat there and consoling words to ease the strain of a day—did you ever stay at home for a full day and do what there was to do, without sweeping a little dirt under the rug or covering used dishes and pans with a washcloth? If you haven't you probably do not understand the genesis of the Japanese custom.

Viewed from a masculine standpoint, it does seem that the housewives have all the best of it.

It seems that way. Did you ever try it when it is the other way? If not, there is no use trying to explain and, if so, explanations are unnecessary. The Japanese custom undoubtedly is intended to prove to the Japanese husband that his wife is carrying a full share of the family burden. Of course, those wives take an unfair advantage; how could a man be expected to do efficiently within the space of one day the things the wife does 364 days a year? Yet it would seem that the custom might be recommended in the interest of domestic harmony. It would deflate a lot of balloons.

Weissmuller's Art.

A TOUCHING DOCUMENT is Johnny Weissmuller's appeal to his public to disbelieve that he struck a man foul in the brawl at the Stork Club, but it assumes that an actor, if we are to consider him such, carries a public responsibility for his private conduct. This would put Mr. Weissmuller in the position of any Senator, judge or local superintendent of sewers, and that would be unwise from the standpoint of both art and politics.

On Weissmuller's part it should be held that his art and his unofficial acts are separate. He should reserve the right to stay up late, drink, gamble and neglect his home on his own time if he should care to. It is only when he swings from limb to limb on a property grapevine, uttering simian chirps and depicting nobility in every curve of his torso, that Mr. Weissmuller is accountable to his public. I might add that, according to my taste, the male abdomen, even in perfection, is not the highest mode of dramatic expression and that, as one who has studied baboonery at the wrestling matches, I challenge his version of the language of the missing link. Still, his abdomen and his characteristic yell are his own art and if the customers accept it that settles that.

* * * *

BUT IF IT BE that on the strength of these gifts Mr. Weissmuller acquires the status of a public leader that can hardly be regarded as a happy sign. True, the citizens have sometimes elected to high office men who were more authentic baboons without acting than Mr. Weissmuller is in his dramatic character. Many a city council or legislature has borne a striking resemblance to the monkey house, but the people in their inscrutable wisdom chose these men to govern their affairs for better or worse, and there is no arguing with the election returns. Yet the struggle to improve is always going on, and the simian character of the public official is gradually fading.

We seemed to be going along rather well, except, perhaps, in California and Chicago, where the politicians cling to the familiar and stubbornly beloved type, when Weissmuller revealed that a man who studiously imitates the ape-man is conscious of a personal following among the people.

I have a feeling that if people must follow an actor as personal devotees they might better select for their idol one who imitates the highest type of man rather than one who swings on a grapevine attired in a somewhat irrelevant diaper and speaks in a tongue he learned at the zoo. It conveys an uncomfortable suggestion that if there came along another and more gifted artist who could impersonate a pig that one would become an even greater leader.

* * * *

BUT I WISH Mr. Weissmuller had been the one who socked a man foul in the night club, because the art of the drama exists largely in the ability of the actor to conceal his true character and assume a totally different one when he is working. Mr. Weissmuller is chivalrous and noble on the screen, but I could better admire his work if I were sure that in private life he was a cad, a cur and a coward, given to dissolute habits, bad company and evil behavior.

If he is personally fine and true, incapable of dirty work and the soul of chivalry, as I gather from his excited appeal to his public, then it is no histrionic feat for him to depict those qualities on the screen. It rather lets me down, because I was in the habit of thinking of Johnny Weissmuller along with Booth.

Being told now that he is a noble on and off, I am left with the thought that he isn't much of an actor but is only being himself, and that brings me to the conclusion that his abdomen is almost the whole sum of his art. I know we have followed some curious idols in this democracy, and I have faith in the people's unerring ability to discern genuine values in the end, but it is a little disquieting to think that a considerable portion of the people are diaphragm worshipers.

Probably his screech should be mentioned as an artistic attribute, but I am inclined to belittle its importance in his success. Father Coughlin also had a screech, but in the showdown it polled only a handful.

"New Capitalism"

Middle West Correspondent Indorses Philosophy Of Frank As Alternative To Recent Scarcity Program.

By Hilding Siversen.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

DR GLENN FRANK, of Wisconsin University, is advocating a "New Capitalism." In simple terms, this doctrine is illustrated by Henry Ford's policy of paying higher and higher wages to employes, not because of altruism or big heartedness but because of the realization that if Ford employes get higher wages, they can buy more radio sets and refrigerators, and if the radio and refrigerator people pay higher wages their employes can buy more Ford cars. The general result can only be achieved by much high-powered sales promotion.

Thus, by an informal conspiracy of higher living standards, through creation of desire, we bring about a higher level of living conditions among the people. This is not, in its final analysis, an unselfish policy, but one of enlightened selfishness, for this policy alone can save the capitalistic system. Of course, such a policy is viewed with bitter distrust by all advocates of communism and socialism, for that very reason. Its soundness, of course, rests upon its moderation. Extravagance, overbuying and reckless installment purchases, only work ultimate harm.

The reports of the Brookings Institution furnish ample and startling testimony as to the shape of things to come if we adhere to the present system of free initiation and enterprise, when that system is flavored with the essence of the "New Capitalism."

The findings directly rebuke the theory of killing little pigs or plowing under crops, for even in the big production year of 1929 American production was so inadequate that only half of all population had slightly more to eat and wear than today's relief wages would buy. How to increase buying power to make possible adequate consumption? By raising the general standard of living, not by decreasing production.

Sharing The Wealth Absurd, Figures Show.

SHARING the wealth becomes an absurd formula when it is learned that even in our most prosperous year we had only $665 of income per capita to share.

To give all American people enough goods and service so that every family might have what the Department of Agriculture calls a reasonable standard of living, the national productive machine would have to produce nearly twice its 1929 figure. We should have had 40,000,000 acres more than 1933 plantings to grow all we needed.

Dividing the money, even to a hundred billion dollars, wouldn't directly add a single item of living to the total wealth we now have.

The general conclusion of the Brookings Institution comes down to a negation of the doctrine of scarcity, namely to lower prices rather than raise them. When prices are reduced and volume is increased, more workers and more capital are required. Employment is increased and spread. Buying power is increased. Living standards are raised.

This is not mere ipse dixit. The formula is amply sustained by charts and statistical data. For instance, take the automobile industry, the classical example:

In 1906, Woodrow Wilson, a warm-hearted humanitarian and then a Princeton professor, expressed the fear that the automobile would be a symbol of arrogance on the part of the wealthy classes, exasperating the farmers to social revolt. He did not realize the implications of quantity production coupled with skillful promotion.

In 1912 the average wholesale price of cars was about $2,000, with 350,000 buyers. By 1926, with the average price about $500, sales were up to almost four million cars. In 1936 the figure is still more impressive. And when it comes to the farmer—he has been one of the most important customers, and with good reason, for if we accept the 1909-14 period as the norm for price parity, we find that the automobile today, expressing it in terms of its purchasing power for farm products, is only 46 per cent of its "parity" price! Putting the thing in another way, the price of automobiles has gone from more than 40 cents a pound down to about 20 cents a pound, to say nothing of the enormous superiority in efficiency, comfort, elegance and power.

This is what happens in the "New Capitalism"—the system of free enterprise and initiative.

Technocratic Formula Disproved In Detroit.

BEFORE dismissing the automobile, let us consider the technocratic formula which holds that machines put men out of work through technological unemployment.

In 1915 automobiles were carrying about 40 billion passenger miles. They carried roughly the same amount as other means of transportation. By 1935 they carried 400 billion passenger miles without appreciably affecting other transportation methods. In other words, there were about 350,000,000,000 additional passenger miles of traffic, created out of thin air in 15 years and representing enormous additional employment and production in the industries of oil, steel, lumber, plastics, rubber and other items. Every filling station, tire shop and garage that you see along the road is a rebuke to the short-sighted technocratic formula. The trouble with the technocrats is that they seemed to assume that only a given amount of production would be necessary for a given period, building their theory upon actual necessities rather than upon those marginal goods and services which are becoming not only important but major items in our national economy.

One commodity in common use has greatly increased, merely because of the psychology of convenience and comfort, and that item has been reduced in price 38 times since 1921. It pays hundreds more men a higher wage than in 1929. Its sales, profits, capital worth and stock prices have all climbed steadily.

And so on through the whole world of American industry. It would be possible to name literally hundreds and perhaps thousands of commodities whose prices have been lowered and whose consumption has been increased by lower prices, quantity production and the education of the people toward a higher standard of living. The technocratic argument that fewer and fewer men are required when mechanical efficiency is increased is refuted by such facts as that of 98 men being required per automobile today as compared with 74 men in 1929, due to increased refinements in manufacture.

Brookings' Findings Ignored By New Deal.

THERE CAN BE scant denial that the whole New Deal philosophy has run counter to the findings of the Brookings reports, which furnish a part of the foregoing demonstration. The fact that the election is past does not in any way change the facts or alter econmoic laws. The American people still have a lively interest in what is to be done with their country.

One movement that is likely to grow is the substitution of scientific business knowledge for political theory in the conduct of campaigns. The Republican Party had an opportunity to substitute such scientific knowledge for the usual political approach, but is did not seem to have the imagination or comprehension of basic conditions to take advantage of this unprecedented opportunity. It did, of course, rebuke the doctrine of scarcity, but in such inadequate and uncomprehending way that it is no wonder the voters did not grasp the terrific truths that lay away down deep under its contentions.

Some group, some element in the American scene has a big job to do. Probably the politicians will not rise to the task, for their training has been in other fields. That job is to furnish information to the people so that they will understand that the doctrine of scarcity is destructive and will surely lead us toward disaster, and that, on the other hand, the doctrine of abundance coupled with the "New Capitalism" is the only way to preserve American free enterprise and initiative.

The Indices do not point toward a one-man dictatorship, but toward a widespread and general knowledge of fundamental economic and social facts—toward the realization that every able-bodied and willing person in the United States can be put to work in the production of needed and desired goods and services, through the process of a continued raising of the standard of living, through legitimate education, through promotion, through the creation of desire and the simulation of ambition, through greater production and through the consequent wider and wider distribution of the products of our marvelous industrial machine. Through this realization the people will also realize that genuine democracy can and must be preserved, and that the people cannot escape their responsibilities in this respect by shrugging shoulders and delegating all their thinking to one man or one small set of men.

U. S. Jewry Concerned Over Palestine Inquiry

New York, Nov. 29 (AP).—The National Council for Palestine expressed "concern" today with the hearings now being held by the British Royal Commission inquiring into the Palestine mandate and served notice that the Jewry of America "believes itself committed to the role of guardian for those helpless Jews who have no protector other than America."

The British commission is reviewing grievances in Palestine, which Great Britain rules under a mandate from the League of Nations.

Political Curbs

By Theodore Marburg

Too Much Equality?

Mr. Marburg, who was United States Minister to Belgium 1912-14, is a noted expert in political science now living in Baltimore.

THE HAVE NOTS in Spain found themselves a majority. Their duly elected Cortes organized a government. Thereupon the have nots proceeded to help themselves to the property of others. Peasants seized the land. The government was either unable or unwilling to oust them. Civil war was inevitable. If now the insurgents win, it will mean complete suspension of free government in favor of a military dictatorship. What better illustration of the necessity for written constitutions, fearlessly interpreted by courts whose decisions are respected and upheld by the government and by the public?

The constitution lays down principles of government based on generations of experience. It provides the delay needed to bring out the informed will of the people as against the emotional will of the people. It holds in check a temporary majority of have nots.

In Italy proletarian excesses, including seizure of factories and character break-down in public and quasi-public services, made possible a Mussolini.

Here in America we hold ourselves to be superior to such happenings. But are we?

* * * *

REPRESENTATIVE government is one of the biggest forward steps in political history. We know that certain peoples are unfitted for it. But why its break-down in so many European countries? It is gone in Italy, Germany, Greece, Austria, and now in Spain. Why? There can be but one answer—an unworkable suffrage in those countries. And the question naturally suggests itself. "Is it not too wide elsewhere today?" Forty-three years ago Funck-Brentano held that political equality, giving rise to a desire for social equality, would some day menace western civilization.

Formerly Belgium had universal suffrage, but with this addition—the plural vote. Certain categories of individuals, such as cultural and professional classes and men of position and of wealth, enjoyed, in some cases, as many as four votes. In this way added weight was given to intelligence, character, and property which by and large is the result of self-control, abstinence and thrift. The plural vote in Belgium, like many other good things, went by the board in the carnival of democracy that followed the World War.

Since that war, we, too, have been wallowing in a carnival of democracy under the delusion that it is the duty of the government to support the people instead of all the people, according to their ability, supporting the government. That way lies revolt, destruction of much that we value and ultimate loss of the very franchise we cherish.

* * * *

HERE IN America false values should not be placed on the Administration sweep in the recent election. It cannot be accepted as an expression of the informed and disinterested will of the people. Included in the majority were an unusually large body of office holders and workers on public relief projects, numbers receiving something for nothing (dole) and a mass of laboring men who are given the dangerous assurance by the Administration's social security law, otherwise admirable, that they may enjoy Federal aid in one form or another when they go on strike.

Irrespective of property interests, a considerable majority of the informed, including the professional class, were arrayed against the New Deal, and we have a right, despite the results of the election, to continue to question seriously its ultimate effect on our people. Happenings abroad should give us pause in the matter of constitutional changes now so freely advocated. The need for certain changes is manifest, but should we not await the return of normal thinking under normal conditions before attempting them?

Both financial honor and the general sense of obligation have already been undermined by legislation and executive example. The thrifty have been deprived of millions in value measured in what they can buy at the prices which must ultimately result from cutting down the gold content of the dollar. Taken together, Administration measures, already constitute a formidable attack on the institution of private property which has spelled progress for the world since primitive times and the only alternative to which—witness Russia—is slavery.

* * * *

I SUGGEST that the one specific change in our Constitution which is urgent is provision for social security legislation by the State and national governments. If the dislocation of labor, due to invention and better organization in various fields, is to be tempered, we need ever higher wages, to absorb the increased product, and ever shorter hours to absorb the surplus labor.

But here again we must see the matter whole. Can these benefits to labor be systematically maintained here unless the leading industrial countries of the world practice them at the same time? A pact made through the International Labor Organization at Geneva, of which we are now happily a member, is indispensible. Such a pact is possible, provided it is agreed to quota, or exclude entirely, the products of countries refusing to adhere. The two measures are interdependent, the treaty and the constitutional amendment which would make it possible for the United States to live up to the obligations of the treaty. It goes without saying that this cannot be done in a day. But, if it is the only way to deal successfully with the problem of unemployment, we should make up our minds about it and at once take initial steps looking to the realization of the double program.

"This England"

By William Lyon Phelps

By American Writer.

Our American novelist, Mary Ellen Chase, who spent two years, from 1934 to 1936, living in England, has written an excellent book, giving her impressions of the country, the climate, the customs, the conventions. Miss Chase, who is professor of English at Smith College, and who would be an ornament to any university faculty, took a sabbatical year in England; instead of living in lodgings, hotels, or pensions, she took a house and liked it so much she asked and received from home permission to extend her stay there for another year. Thus she has been an actual English resident in an English house for two years.

* * * *

I had the pleasure of seeing her in her English home in June, 1935. The house stands in that suburb of Cambridge made famous by Rupert Brooke—I mean, of course, Grantchester. She seemed more than contented; she was exuberantly happy; and I am very glad that she, with the art of the trained writer, has given us Americans her impressions during her chosen and cheerful exile. Her book is called "This England" and is published by Macmillan, New York.

She does well to devote a chapter to the weather. The one thing at night to which all English people pay the closest attention on the nadio is the weather forecast, though there is very little hope in it. A colleague of mine who spent a year at Oxford said the weather forecast every day should consist of two words—settled—rain. To us who are accustomed to the glorious American autumn, the continuous rains in England are depressing. But it won't do to wait indoors for it to clear up; it does not clear up. The thing to do is to pay no attention to it, remembering, also, that it isn't much colder or even much damper outdoors than in.

* * * *

There is only one thing more depressing than English weather and that is English food. But these are the only things that are depressing. Everything else in England seems to me about perfect, although Miss Chase justly criticizes some features—long-distance telephoning, for example. But if that seems to her difficult, she ought to try it again in France. A Paris newspaper said, "To get your telephone connection in Paris is no longer an achievement. It is a career."

Although saying everything unfavorable about England that can be said, Miss Chase loves England and the English people with all her heart; two of the happiest years of her life were the two she spent there. And I believe that those Englishmen who are forced to live in foreign countries have a homesickness for England that is heart-rending, devastating, and terrible.

The New Europe

Observer Sees Little At German Army Maneuvers.

By Walter Millis.

This article by Walter Millis, author of "The Road to War," is the fourth of a series of five close-up views of Europe today. The concluding article will appear Thursday.

I HAPPENED to be in Berlin in the latter part of September, just when the Germans were holding their great Second Army maneuvers near Bad Nauheim — the biggest thing of the kind they had attempted since the pre-war days. My friend said he thought the new German Army was one of the most important things in Europe, and wouldn't I like to go down with him and see the show? I accepted with eagerness. Then, he said, we could catch the night train that evening. Enthusiastically I agreed.

Of course, he added, I was to understand that he hadn't any official authorization; since he would probably be refused, he had omitted the formality of asking for one. I thought about concentration camps, and said, "Oh." He said he was sure there wouldn't be any trouble; if you boldly marched into a place the Germans usually assumed you must have a right to be there. "And when you do get into difficulties, if you just talk English very fast and look a little stupid it generally works." We caught the night train for Bad Nauheim. . . .

We did not see a great deal of the maneuvers for two reasons. One was that the authorities were taking even more precautions this time than we had anticipated. The maneuver area was an immense rectangular tract perhaps 25 by 40 miles laid out in the Vogelsberg—beautifully clipped and manicured hill country of farm and woodland rising to the eastward from Bad Nauheim, thickly peppered with brick and half-timber villages and crossed by two or three main motor roads going into Frankfurt-am-Main.

These highroads made no difference. They, lik every other avenue, big or little, leading into the area, were blocked off by strong brown-shirt and police patrols, and all traffic was diverted; 1,000 square miles or more of populous territory was thus simply excised from the heart of the countryside for the week or so of the maneuvers, and within it we did not pass a car or truck (we passed few of any kind not belonging to the army) without its official windshield paster authorizing its presence. The absence of any paster on our own windshield somewhat limited the opportunities for observation. But the second reason why we did not see much of the maneuvers was more important. Modern maneuvers are not seen. . . .

We were standing on an open hilltop, with fields hedged by trees and brush dropping away to a wide valley below. There was a village in the head of the valley at our feet and a long, straight ribbon of roadway trailing off beyond it and a splendid sweep of country—fields and patches of woodland spread out, perhaps, for miles—on either side. And there was not a soul, not a sign of movement of any sort, visible in that whole placid landscape. Yet we were in the center of an area which contained some 60,000 or 80,000 fighting men maneuvering across it to their first contact.

Sightseers Saw Few Soldiers In Action.

OUR HILLTOP meadow was full of sightseers—scores of German officers, as handsome as they used to be in the war-time staff photographs, detailed for observation from other commands; a small battalion of military attaches, wearing every uniform under the sun, not excluding that of the Red Army; a crowd of villagers; another crowd of authorized civilians, trampling about with maps and field glasses. After I had been there some time it gradually dawned upon me that there were some other people on the hill, too. Naturally I had not failed to note the private soldier lying on his stomach in the grass 3 feet in front of me; but it was only the movement of a hand which showed me that there were two more of them, perhaps 15 feet away behind, wholly concealed up to that moment simply by the leafy twigs they had placed in the bands of their trench helmets.

A corporal, stooping as low through the crowd of sightseers as if real bullets had been whistling past his head, came along with a couple of tins of soup; he passed on down to the trees fringing the farther side of the first field, and I then saw that there were two or three more men there. Farther along there was a glint from another steel helmet, and another, and I began to grasp the situation. There were two crowds of people on that hilltop—the visible, erect and voluble one and a second nearly invisible beneath their feet. The whole place, the bushes, the long grass, the woods on the rear slope, was alive with scattered men; we were in a forward position strongly held by the "blue" army; but it took a long time to find that out. You do not see modern maneuvers—not much of them, at any rate.

Far away a motor car came sliding up that long road, like a single bead upon a string, and vanished into the village at our feet; there was a distant popple of machine-gun fire and a moment later the car reappeared, racing back as it had come. So the "reds," presumably, had discovered that the "blues" were in the village, too. But the two armies were still maneuvering for position and there would be no attack mounted that day; nothing more happened, nothing more was seen, except, just as we were leaving, a fugitive air raid on the hilltop. The drone of motors came up out of the valley floor, and a squadron of bombers roared suddenly and terribly, just overhead.

It was a morale-shaking performance, of course. The helmeted machine gunners were leaning from the forward cockpits, their weapons trained down at us. A couple of symbolic bombs—little puffs of smoke and sudden balls of magnesium fire in the air—were dropped; the machine guns on the hill rattled away, and the raid went by . . .

Teuton Thoroughness Characterizes Display.

MILITARY EXPERTS told us later that they had seen nothing as realistic as these maneuvers since the World War ended. The machine guns were an example of the technical lengths to which the Germans have gone. Since ordinary blank cartridges do not give the recoil necessary to work a machine gun, special cartridges are used with wooden bullets. But the impressive thing is not the technical devices employed for verisimilitude; other armies have them. It is the completeness with which the troops themselves enter into every detail of the game.

It is a problem in most armies, I have been told, to make the men behave as though they were really in battle—to take cover, to refrain from shooting away their ammunition so as to save the weight of carrying it, to stop when they are theoretically "dead" and so on. It seemed no problem with these strapping German youngsters, having the obvious time of their lives and playing war with all the deadly serious happiness and precision of 10-year-olds playing Indian.

We drove away down the hill toward the "blue" rear—and discovered the "blue" army. You see it from the back. Every patch of wood was crammed with armed men. The fields were empty, but there were little groups of them behind hedges or thin strings of men lying along the road embankments, their leaf-colored helmets or perhaps the muzzles of their machine guns only showing. Anti-tank guns were set up at every crossroad, or at every point where a roadway went through toward the enemy. You see them, from the back, too, with their little groups of gunners, but you pass by and within a couple of hundred yards gun and men, though using only a few branches for camouflage, have dissolved into the neighboring hedge or bit of bush, and the utter emptiness of the modern maneuver ground resumes its placid dominance.

"Dispersion" and "depth"—on the maneuver field, at any rate—have replaced alike the massed lines of the nineteenth century and the World War trench systems. It is why one may tour the "battlefield" as we did for many miles without ever finding anything that looks like a "battle." We were in a village at the very moment it was changing hands in an outpost action, and were, I am sorry to say, unaware of the fact. Of course, in real war the situation would be more obvious. But the general impression is simply that of loose nets or skeins of men thrown over the whole face of the countryside, and one sees what is happening only in bits and fragments—an anti-tank gun set up here, some armored cars waiting under a hill or taking a pot shot or two down a seemingly empty road, a hurrying reconnaissance group of motorcycles, a field telegraph station, nothing solid anywhere near the "front."

Experts Enthusiastic Over Reality Of "Battle."

BUT IT IS NOT the technical details, interesting though they may be, which make the German army in action a fearful and impressive thing. It is the army itself. It is the appalling thoroughness. It is the happy completeness with which the entire countryside—the S. A. guards at the crossroads, the villagers, Gen. Blomberg and his brass hats in their staff car and the peasant lad in his tin helmet—plays at war.

We were in the one narrow street of a picture-postcard village, in a crowd of peasant people, watching a division march through on its way to the front. First one, lone soldier; then presently two more, each carefully looking around corners and into barns for "enemy;" then a motorcycle with side car; then, at lessening intervals squad cars, more motorcycles, mechanized machine gun units; until, imperceptibly, this trickle of men and vehicles had swollen and strengthened and we were watching the main river of the division flow by.

All the leading troops, in the squat trench helmets of the Germans, had the familiar inhuman, robot-like look of simple armed brute power on the march. Impersonal and dreadful. But, because it was a warm, sunny day, the later formations, beyond danger of theoretical sniping fire, were bareheaded, the steel helmets slung on their arms or hung on the sides of the trunks. With that simple change they ceased to be robots; they became a lot of healthy, cheerful and individual German boys, hard at work and having the time of their lives. And that was rather more dreadful still.

Modern Tactics Keep Soldiers Hidden In Battle.

It is difficult to convey the impression one feels when "manpower"—that comfortably statistical abstraction which nations expend, along with ammunition, in war—turns suddenly before one's eyes into men. There was manpower in the thousands, lugging or pushing or riding on its cannon and machine guns and all the other brutally mechanical panoply of war, but is was made up of completely human beings, of flesh and blood men, each warm, alive, unique as you looked into his passing eyes.

The village girls threw flowers at them and they grinned and stuck them in their rifle muzzles, and the column passed down the road, laughing or grumbling, borne along to its hidden future upon its dead engines of destruction, but borne along, too, upon an idea—an idea of patriotism and unanimity and of war as glorious in a sunny countryside.

That was the most dreadful thing I saw at the maneuvers of the German second army in the Vogelsberg above Bad Nauheim. But then, of course, there was one element of warfare which I did not see anywhere. That was blood. Or even a suggestion of it. As a matter of fact, I did not even see one hospital unit or as much as a field dressing station.

Mrs. Ward's PartyHonors Mrs. Perry

Two Plan Joint Trip Around World Later in Season.

Brilliant Company Present at Event Here for New Yorker.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Mrs. Dorothy Lee Ward was hostess at a cocktail party yesterday afternoon in compliment to Mrs. Marsden Perry, jr., of New York, who was her guest for the week-end. Mrs. Perry and Mrs. Ward expect to leave later in the season for a trip around the world which will take them to England in time for the coronation ceremonies, where they will be joined by Mrs. William Bride, who was asssisting at the party yesterday.

Mrs. Ward, whose home is a veritable treasure house of rare prints, jades and tapestries from the Orient, was gowned in a dress of gold lame, matching the gold of her hair and blending with the gold in many of the embroideries which decorate the walls. Her long, green jade necklace completed her costume.

Mrs. Perry wore a black net gown, becoming with her black hair, a strand of pearls at her neck and a corsage of purple velvet violets. She has recently been enjoying some shooting in North Carolina, and, after the week-end here, is returning to her home in New York. She expects to return to the Capital again, however, in about ten days. Mrs. Bride wore a red tunic frock.

Mr. Azer Present.

The Charge d'Affaires, of Egypt, Mr. Anis Azer, was one of the early arrivals, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Royal C. Colman and Miss Margaret Stohl, of New York City, who have been guests at the legation, and for whom he entertained there on Friday night. Friends who had been at the party were still talking about it. Mrs. Colman wore a black velvet gown with white at the neck and a black velvet hat with a rose-colored bird of paradise at one side.

Mrs. J. J. Mack, who was in brown, with a little brown felt hat, was accompanied by Miss Lila Townsend, who wore green with a gray hat; the Financial Counselor of the Rumanian Legation and Mme. Boncesco arrived from one party and were off to another later in the evening, Mme. Boncesco wearing a black satin gown of novel design and a small black hat.

Mrs. Paul Myron Linebarger was in conversation with Mrs. Mack in the dining room, where the buffet table was appointed with a bouquet of yellow roses in the center and lighted with white candles in silver candelabra. Mrs. Linebarger wore a coat of black velvet with a white ermine collar matched by the cluster of ermine tails trimming the crown of her black velvet hat.

Mrs. Webb Attends.

Mrs. Richard E. Webb, wife of Commander Webb, was there, accompanied by Mrs. Alexander Thomson, of London, who is spending the winter with her. Mrs. Thomson wore a small black hat with a braid of silk across the top which might have been a braid of her own black hair as it appeared from a glance across the room. Mrs. Alice Smoot also was among the guests, as were Mrs. Fred Britten, Mr. and Mrs. William Bride, jr., the Charge d'Affaires of Czechoslovakia, Dr. Josef Nemecek; the First Secretary of the Czechoslovakian Legation, Mr. Otakar Kabelac; the Naval Attache of the German Embassy, Rear Admiral Wittoeft-Emden, and Mr. E. D. Flather.

So many were the interesting art objects in the house that the guests were frankly admiring them as they went from room to room. Mrs. Ward told one of her friends who admired a hand mirror with a carved jade handle, how she had had it made, the handle converted from that of an ancient Chinese saber.

Agnes MacPhail Honored at Tea

Visiting Canadian M. P. Lectured on Town Hall Program.

The Hon. Agnes MacPhail, whose lecture last night at the Town Hall attracted Washington society, was honored at a tea on Saturday afternoon at the home of Miss Emma T. Hahm, Daniel road. Miss Hahm invited to meet her Washington members of the Zonta Club, with which she also has been affiliated.

The distinguished visitor, who is the only woman member of the Canadian Parliament, arrived at noon from Syracuse, N. Y., where she addressed the Rotary Club on Friday afternoon and a large meeting of the women's organizations of the city in the evening. From here she goes to New York, where she will speak at Town Hall tomorrow morning.

She wore a costume of black, her tailored crepe frock with a narrow vest of white at the neck and three brilliant buttons the trimming down the front. Miss Hahm's dress was of dubonnet crepe. They received in the drawing room where a cheery fire was crackling in the open grate, and later the guests went to the dining room for tea. Those assisting included Miss Esther C. M. Gude, Mrs. Russell E. Singer, Mrs. Floyd Jennings, Miss Martha Edwards, Miss Caroline Sorenson, Miss Mildred Linster.

Among the guests were Mrs. Edith C. Salisbury, Mrs. R. Branson Thomas, Mrs. Paul E. Howe, Mrs. Mildred Dickerson McCallip and Miss I. Malinde Havey, all past presidents of the Zonta Club of Washington. Mrs. Howe and Mrs. Sarah E. Sumner both arrived from attending a "hat party" which had been given by Miss Mary Louise Brown, of American University, at which all of the guests wore hats of other periods. Among others present were Mrs. Hugh Preston, Mrs. Louis R. Stambaugh and Mrs. Louis C. Schrer.

Miss MacPhail has been in Washington once before, on the occasion when she addressed the Woman's University Club. It was then she first met Mr. William E. Armstrong, former professor of international relations at American University, who was a member of the Town Hall panel last night. He had then just returned from Geneva.

Miss MacPhail confessed she always is a little nervous just before she goes on the platform to speak. "It is especially difficult in the Capital," she told a friend, "to talk without being unfair to my own country and at the same time to be polite and to say something."

Among those who were in the enthusiastic Town Hall audience at the Shoreham last evening were the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, the latter in a handsome gown of black velvet; Mrs. Hugh Campbell Wallace, Mrs. Sydney Cloman, Mrs. Anne Archbold, Mrs. Sherman Miles, Mrs. Blair Bannister, also in black velvet; Miss Meta Morris Evans, who was wearing wine velvet; Mrs. Huston Thompson, in black satin; Mrs. Alexander Dye, wearing a smart gown of brown crepe; Mrs. Ernest Draper, wife of the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, wearing red velvet, and Miss Laura Harlan.

The present head of the House of Mercy is Deaconess Lillian M. Yeo and the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, is president of the board of trustees.

Among patrons and patronesses for the concert are Mrs. William Howard Taft, Mrs. Charles E. Hughes, Mrs. Owen J. Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Col. and Mrs. E. M. Watson, Mr. and Mrs. R. Max Kauffman, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Gaillard, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Davidge, Mr. and Mrs. L. Corrin Strong, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur H. Tirrell, Mr. and Mrs. Harold N. Marsh and Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock.

THE MERRY WHIRL by MARYLYN

When Anis Azer entertains he leaves nothing to be desired. A natural-born host, he spellbinds everyone with his care-free nonchalance. At his supper party, in honor of the Royal C. Colmans and Margaret Stohl, of New York, there was a brilliant assemblage of guests and so many of them, too. Unless one meandered continually from the formal drawing room through the central hall, the salon and into the dining room and back again, some of the guests would never have been seen. Many of them tried this and got as far as the aforementioned dining room, but, alas, the tables—(note the plural)—were far too alluring.

For the first course, as one might call it, there were cocktails—not just one or perhaps two varieties. No, indeed. Anis strolled over to the side table and in his own inimitable way showed his guests the different containers, of which there were at least six or seven, and then left them to help themselves—something people really love to do, and rarely have a thoughtful host who lets them.

Aside from the usual olives, celery, pickles and nuts, there were delicious pate de fois gras, golden roasted turkeys, crab salad, spiced vegetable salad, all of which were nicely finished off with champagne.

Not a little bit of color was added to the party by the presence of Awad, who has been with Mr. Azer since about 1925. When the tall Egyptian in his full scarlet trousers, wide sash, short jacket and, last but not least, fez, first appeared passing the tray of punch, Mrs. Barge Hartz said that was just what she had needed to provide the correct finishing touch to Bette's party last week.

Mustafa Youssef, son of the Minister (who, by the way, is arriving here on December 9), was sitting off in a corner with little Eleanor Campbell—laughing and talking over their glasses of sparkling beverage. It is almost impossible to believe that dainty little Eleanor, with her enormous steel-gray eyes, and who that evening was in a pleated shell-pink chiffon, could handle horses with the skill she does.

An interesting trio of ladies from foreign shores and whose countries are just about as far apart as they can be and still be on this globe, included little Mme. Rajamaitri, of Siam, whose golden crepe gown had a halter neck of flame-colored carnations; the Marchioness of Sant' Orsola, of Italy, and Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne, wife of the Minister of Norway.

The Chilean Ambassador, Senor Don Manuel Trucco, was there with only two of his daughters, Chela and Rebeca, as Marta is in New York. New York seems to be a very fascinating place these days. Tom Burke was a bachelor for the evening, as Anna, who went to Gotham with him last week, found so much to do with plays and shopping that she stayed on.

Alma Britten's printed gown was the cynosure for all eyes. It was bright, rich and just the thing for a cold winter's evening when one wants to forget the nip in the outdoors air.

Tall blonde Ren Van der Wyck arrived smiling and nice as usual. Mrs. George Oakley Totten's gown of net, jet and sequins made a soft swishing sound as she passed by, and we found ourselves looking twice at the nearest window to be sure that it was not a gentle hail or rain we were hearing.

A few—(just a few, now, because we could not begin to list all of those enjoying themselves at the Massachusetts avenue Legation)—we saw were the Turkish Ambassador, Mr. Mehmet Munir Ertegun, and his First Secretary, Mr. Resid Anamur; Sibilla Skidelsky, in soft seafoam green crepe with a gathered neckline; the Said Zoulfikars, she arrived in an unusual wrap of turquoise-blue velvet; Cecelia Talbott, whose debutante sister was at some other party, and Charles Thompson; Capt. and Mme. Sable, of the French Embassy; the Commercial Secretary of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Campbell, and Mme. Boncescu, the lady of the monocle.

YoungRiders Match Paces For Oldsters

Crowd on Hand as Rock Creek Juniors Hold Fourth Show.

By Marylyn Reeve.

Washington, the city of horse shows and equine enthusiasts, knows too little and has heard too little of the younger set's doings along these lines. For four years there have been annual shows given by the Rock Creek Riding Club juniors. Anyone who happens upon the afternoon of the performances and endeavors to park his car and watch is politely, but nevertheless firmly, waved on—the audience consists of members of the participants' families and their guests only.

Yesterday afternoon the white-fenced ring on the hill just off Beach drive was thronged by the relatives and friends of the 60-odd young riders. In the first classes, the tiny tots of 4 and 5 who handled their mounts with skill included Ann Kilpatrick, who is such a youngster she almost needs a stepladder to mount her horse; Ellen Taylor, John Sexton, Gloria de Quevedo, Betsy van Dergrist, Sully Wheeler, Billy Ross and Hood Connolly.

The same horses that had so quietly gone through their paces were also the mounts used by the older riders, 10 and 12 years of age, dashing around the steeple course at breakneck speed, over brush, down 8-foot embankments, across a narrow footbridge, around a bend, then some more jumps. One of the most interesting classes was that showing different forms of riding as it is recorded in history. For instance, there was the portrayal of Paul Revere's famous trip, with Miss Claragale Goldbeck in the saddle.

An unusual feature was the dressage riding which was so expertly presented by Miss Goldbeck, Louise Crosby, Barbara Hawkins, Stratton and Alice Nicholson and Betty Jullien, all of whom had been personally schooled in this most advanced form of equitation by Mr. William Todd, who is famous from New York to Honolulu for his riding and horses.

Among the other youthful riders taking part yesterday were Patricia Doherty, Ann Heckman, Charles Magee, Susan Sexton, Patricia Kavanaugh, Peggy Unzicker, Barbara Baldridge, Adrian Stern, Frances Silsbee, Janet Hartley, Dan Meloy, Karl Kaplowitz, Connie Little, Morgan Stern, Christine Morley, Betty Wright, Mary Jonice Diemel, Nancy Hendricks, Mary McLean, Marty Bishop, Lorna Morley, Janice Phillips, Gloria Thomas, Audrey Lincoln, Janet Gibson, Elsa Thompson, Betty Lou Polhamus.

The judges were Miss Mildred Elliott, who is the head of the school of equitation at Converse College, and has been spending the holidays here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas C. Elliott; Miss Elizabeth O. Cullen and Miss Ilse Bahnemann, of Berlin, Germany.

The GENTLER SEX

By Malvina Lindsay.

Cave Man.

Mr. Jimps looked at the clock. A quarter to five. "I'm going home," he decided. "What's the use of slaving around this place any longer?"

As he strode through the outer office a sudden hush fell on file clerks and stenographers. "Have the girls stay tonight and finish those form sheets, Miss Snipp," he said curtly to a haughty young woman in black satin and rhinestones. She raised frightened eyes. "Yes, y—yes, of course, Mr. Jimps," she stammered. "I mean yes, only of course, but—"

"No 'buts' about it!" growled Mr. Jimps. "I said 'TONIGHT.'"

As he passed the information desk, a bevy of office boys quickly dispersed. The new girl with the Marlene Dietrich eyebrows gave him a friendly yet slightly awed glance. He responded with a cool and casual appraisal. "Let 'em keep their distance . . . at first," he thought.

The elevator, halfway past his floor, returned for him, expressed him to the bottom. He stalked out the front door, met the general manager, waved to him nonchalantly. "Taxi, sir?" "Taxi, sir," importuned half a dozen drivers, but he walked on loftily to the bus station.

All the way out to Wildwood a blonde in a leopard coat in the seat across cast interested looks toward him. He ignored her until he started to leave the bus, then threw her a provocative glance—one that hinted tantalizingly of future meetings.

He swung along freely the two blocks to his home. Other men were laden with odd-shaped bundles, things that looked as if they might be water faucets, goldfish bowls, radio tubes, dog biscuits. "Married worms!" he thought contemptuously.

An advancing platoon of small boys on roller skates stopped abruptly, wheeled clear of the sidewalk to let him pass. A kiddie car came thundering behind him, then halted suddenly and retreated.

The wife of his new next door neighbor was on her lawn trying to entice her Pekingese into his harness. She looked up, met Mr. Jimp's eye, smiled helplessly. "I simply can't do a thing with him," she said.

Mr. Jimps snapped his fingers and pointed authoritatively toward the harness. The dog trotted obediently to its mistress. Her admiring eyes followed Mr. Jimps down the street.

His own yard was in commotion. A gang of dogs was romping over the shrubbery, a group of small boys fighting over a coaster wagon.

"Get out!" Mr. Jimps thundered at the dogs. They scattered in terror, an English bull leaping the hedge, a German police dog slinking away, its tail between its legs. "Stop it!" he commanded the boys. Four of them scampered wildly for home. Mr. Jimps looked sternly at his own sons and pointed toward the back yard. Shamefacedly they retreated with their wagon.

The radio was blaring in the living room. His wife rushed in to turn it off. "I—I didn't expect you home so early, George," she quavered. "I—I'm terribly sorry, but dinner isn't quite ready. Lillie, Lillie, hurry up. Mr. Jimps must have his dinner immediately. Wait, I'll get those things out of that chair. Sister! Sister! Bring Pappa his pipe, quick; . . . Here's the paper . . . nobody's unfolded it . . . wait, I'll get some matches . . ."

* * * *

A shudder wrenched Mr. Jimps. His wife was tugging at his shoulder. "George, for Heaven's sakes, get up. You'll be late again and old Flint'll fire you. Besides you've got to go to the store. There isn't a bit of oatmeal in the house."

Built-in Light Effects.

Modern rooms are shown with built-in lighting effects and in some cases, actual lamps are built in desks or book-cases that are built in to the room. The bases, in such cases, are of matching or contrasting wood and only the bulb and shade need be purchased separately.

Hats to Top Fur Coats—Designed for Smartness and Comfort

The black antelope turban (right), is smartly swirled into a high cone; rows of stitching emphasize the slanting line. Purple felt and two vivid royal blue quills distinguish the hat (center) to accompany the sports type of furs.

The head of silver fox skin ornaments the chic toque (left) of black vis-a-vis. It completes the effect of the huge collar adorning the black coat. Toques are recommended to complement furs—they fit heads snugly.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Girl of 18, Affianced to College Boy of 19, Asks If True Love Is Possible at Their Age.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 18 years of age and my boy friend, with whom I have been going steady for over two years, is 19. We have been engaged for over a year and at the time of our engagement he gave me a very beautiful diamond. Although we are very much in love, everyone seems to think we are making a mistake in being so attached to and engrossed with each other at our age.

* * * *

Our engagement will have to be a rather long one because my boy friend has another year of college before he will be on his own to get a job and prepare himself financially for marriage. I do not go to college but started working immediately after graduating from high school in June, 1935. I now have a very good position which pays very well for a girl of my age.

* * * *

Miss Haworth, do you think we are making a mistake by falling in love so young? Do you think it will last? I am perfectly content and have no desire to be in the company of other boys and do not think I shall ever find anyone else who will love me with all the true love that is bestowed on me now. He has not asked another girl out in these past two years.

* * * *

On several occasions I have been asked out by other boys who are friends of long standing and I have accepted the invitations at the desire of my boy friend. I have never betrayed him and he realizes and respects this fact. Boys who ask me to go out are acquainted with my engagement and they have neither expected nor received so much as a good night kiss on these occasions. I never fail to compare other boys with my fiance and find that in my opinion he always stands out as having more intelligence, better character and equally good looks.

* * * *

Do you think it is possible for two young persons our age to know what real love is, or do you think both of us should broaden our acquaintanceships? In spite of what other people say, I believe our love will last; inasmuch as we are as much in love today—or more so, I should say—than we were during the first months of our engagement. Do you think long engagements are detrimental to real love—especially love at our age? Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain.

CONTENTED.

Time Only Can Tell.

DEAR CONTENTED: Since love comes unbidden to the human heart, I suppose the common sense thing to do is to make it welcome when it arrives under happy auspices, as it seems to have come to you and your fiance. It is a generally accepted truism that long engagements are apt to rob romance of its downy bloom, but it is equally axiomatic that there are exceptions to all rules and that it takes the exception to prove the rule. Your engagement, therefore, may be one of those fortunate exceptions which prove the rule.

* * * *

I believe your finance must be an exceptionally decent, self-respecting and high-minded young man, for the reason that he is entirely willing that you should retain your friendship with other men, and because he is not jealous, possessive, suspicious or distrustful of these friendships. A man who can give to a girl his single minded, wholehearted devotion, and yet encourage her to keep her other friendships with other men alive, should make an excellent husband. For such a man presumably possesses that rare ability to concede his beloved the right to live a well-rounded life of her own.

* * * *

If your betrothal is the symbol of a mutual attraction based on essential compatibility of mind and spirit, a long engagement is not necessarily a hazardous arrangement. On the contrary, it may be a very sensible arrangement, providing neither of you loses contact with other friends of the opposite sex. Both of you need these contacts in order to prove to yourselves, over and over again, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that each has found in the other the ideal life companion.

* * * *

I do not believe that a girl of 18 or a boy of 19 is always capable of feeling or even sensing the nature, depth and significance of real love; but it is entirely possible that they might discover between themselves the possibility of developing such a mature attachment. Time alone will tell you the truth about this young love, and it is this necessary element of time which a long engagement can provide. From the psychiatric point of view, real love is a relationship of slow growth, developed over a long period of mutually helpful and mutually inspirational association.

Hats Match Belts.

Hat bands and belts come from the same bolt of material in Hollywood. It started with a costume Ann Sheridan wears in "The Great O'Malley," in which she encircles both her waist and her hat with Roman stripes. The ends of the sash are worn tucked in like a swaggering Arab's. The hat band is so high it goes two-thirds of the way up the hat.

Hats Must Be Chosen to Enhance Luxurious Air of Fur Garments

By Ethel Ehlen.

The Post Fashion Editor.

YOU have to cater to fur and fur-trimmed coats when buying a hat to accompany them! Fur is snooty. It is synonymous with luxury and elegance—there is something regal about it. Any little old hat purchased and worn with nonchalance will not do for furs. The chapeau to top your fur or fur-collared coat must not only be lovely in itself, but of sufficient character to complement the wrap. The hat, however, should not overpower the coat. When dealing with furs, a perfect blending of materials and styling is the guidepost for smart results.

Another improtant thing to consider when selecting a hat in this category—it must be chosen in accordance with the kind of fur with which it will be worn, whether the fur is long or short-haired, of the sports or dressy type. If the fur is flat, as Hudson seal, Persian lamb or squirrel, the hat can be complicated—both as to styling and trimming. For long-haired fur collars of the voluminous type, the hat should be small and chic, yet in a way unobtrusive.

For Regal Furs.

Mink, while still considered a regal fur, is being fashioned in various interpretations this winter—princess lines and swing styles for daytime and capes for evening. It has become a fur for general wear, due to the manipulation of the pelts and the type of accessories which are now chosen to accent it. In fact the idea has become so popular and widespread that materials and colors for frocks, shoes and hats are created especially to accompany mink. The best type of hat here is the one trimmed with the same fur, or soft materials like velour, suede and velvet, bordered with mink.

Another popular custom is choosing skins of silver fox or the like, to adorn both coat and hat. The fox head is usually perched jauntily at one side or directly in front of the small chapeau. Furs used to fashion entire coats or as trimming are often repeated on the hat; either forming the greater part of the hat, or merely as an accent. Furs and feathers are an interesting merger—numerous fur coat-hats flaunt a long colorful feather; a gay note to keep the ensemble from being too severe.

Designed for Comfort.

While styling, materials and color are infinitely important, comfort should also be considered. There is nothing more annoying than a hat brim which is constantly at variance with the fur collar. If your collar is large and enveloping, then choose a small hat, which either fits the head snugly in the back, or does not extend down the back of the head at all. The majority of hats this season are designed with this problem in mind, so there should be no difficulty in finding a hat that is comfortable as well as smart. For the fur coat which is decidedly of the sports type, casual felt hats are the correct choice—wider of brim, as collars are usually small.

The spectator sports fur coat, which, by the way, is an excellent choice for a person who must look to the budget, is versatile enough to accommodate hats of various styling and materials.

For street or business the hat may be large or small, but should be simple. When afternoon or informal evening clothes are worn, then the hat can be of the dressy type and still not conflict with the coat. With hats appearing in the evening fashion scene in great numbers this winter, a correct and smart choice for almost all informal occasions is the small velvet or velour version, more often than not, flaunting a tiny veil.

Interesting Parties

WHY NOT give a party? Wedge one in during the week-end. It will freshen up your outlook on life and most likely give you a number of things to talk and laugh over for several days.

Everyone can be a screen star for one night at your Hollywood party. It's simple and easy. You get a lot of rouge, lipstick, powder, mascara, eye shadow, cold cream, clean cotton and cleansing tissues. Clip from one of the motion-picture magazines the pictures of various men and women stars. Each woman member of your party will be a girl star and each man a male star. Next, everyone is made up and each gives an imitation of the star he or she represents.

The Hollywood party should make a big hit with the high-school crowd or the college group. Dancing could follow. Have a buffet supper served by the boys to their partners, and eaten from daintily covered bridge tables. For the menu you might like to serve: Oyster and mushroom patties, potato chips, olives, pickles, toasted cheese sandwiches, coconut cake, hot chocolate.

There are many suggestions for various types of parties in our new 40-page booklet, Good Parties, including New Year's Showers, Fortune Telling, Magic Tricks, Children's Parties, Church Benefits, bright ideas and suggested menus that you can follow through completely or change around to meet your own ideas.

Radio Star Mixes Marriage, Career

Helen Jepson Says Talent Should Be Developed.

"My own experience has proved that marriage and career can mix when the two are blended," writes Helen Jepson, radio and open star, in December Good Housekeeping. "I have never thought of the development of my career as one job and the fulfillment of my marriage as another.

Women seeking careers are confronted by the same factors which confront men. Into the development of their talents go the same elements of study, practice and infinite effort. Why should a woman renounce her talent when she marries? We don't expect a man to renounce his. Marriage has always been to me a sacred thing. I have always considered a fine home and a family the most important assets of a married couple; happiness revolves around these two. But I can not agree that a career involving public work must be renounced when a woman marries."

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Nov. 29.

AS A CLOSE observer of winter sports (from a safe distance, of course, and usually by an open fire) I now feel safe in saying that skating bids fair to get the nod this season over the fine old art of skiing, among the local pink-cheeked Girls Who Do Things.

ALICE HUGHES.

In the first place, this town abounds in rinks, both outdoor and of the roofed variety, whereas devotees of the twin barrel staves must take a train in search of a minor Alp. In the second place, the fair sportswomen always have their eagle eyes cocked for the latest and most fetching sort of costume in which to perform their didoes, and the pretty new figure-skating outfits now being artfully promoted are a pleasant change from last year's coverall skiduds.

So it's ho for the figure-eight, the pigeon-wing. The fact that Sonja Henie's first skating movie is about to burst will not do the sport any harm either, for she is a dream skating, if ever one lived.

A couple of our smart minxes named Miriam Whittemore and Helena Horton, sensing the trend toward the gleaming runners, have done a whirlwind job of selling the skate-suit idea to the Gotham Fair. They've set up a regular rink in a big Fifth avenue department store, and professional customers will show the lady customers just how cute they can look (they hope) whirling around in these short skirts with hems running from 90 to 108 inches. Knitted hats and gloves, sweaters and jackets and 42-inch stockings are also part of the fashion picture. It's all wonderful—and I'll be glad to see them in the newsreels!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN — As you may have read, Rose, the famous Pekinese who was stuck in last year's local social register as a gag by her owners, the young George L. K. Morrises, didn't make the book this year. It's rank discrimination, I say. You should see some of the two-legged variety that did get elected!

Margaret Sullavan is honeymoonless, and laboring nightly in "Stage Door," the hit show, while Leland Heyward, the husband, is away on business. Odd note is that Maggie plays a non-drinking actress in the play—and her fellow-actors chipped in 37 cents apeice to buy the girl a large jug of champagne! She's just bought a nice tidy estate over in Jersey against the time she and Leland settle down and achieve a family.

The skaters are busy, but the ski-folk are doing all right, too. A potent avenue emporium has again installed its rock-salt Matterhorn, and Sig Buchmayr, hot from the Tyrol, is teaching the girls how to take their lumps with grace and charm. So the ducky little Tyrolean jackets and the cunnin' feather in the hat are with us once more.

I suppose thousands of us were waiting for the inevitable word that Mrs. W. Simpson won the heart of royalty by whipping him up corn pone and the fancier gastronomic delights of the Free State. It had to come—and it has, along with reams of the most unmitigated tosh that ever surrounded an international romance . . .

Out of the thousands of weird organizations here probably my favorite is the Millionaires Alimony Defense Society, organized by Samuel W. Rushmore, who spent $65,000 getting rid of his missus. Qualifications for membership are a million and wife-trouble, and what a combo that is. Rushmore has already lined up six of the poor boys to fight the present alimony laws of the grand old State of New York. If the lads don't ante up here, you know, they get tossed into the Thirty-seventh street clink practically forever . . .

Ever hear of an "ash-can hat"? Oh, I know we've all seen 'em—but that's the name given here by the trade to those second-hand hats placed on sale without new labels announcing the fact that the sky-pieces are used. The sale of "ash-can hats" has risen to the dignity of a regular racket here, and seven gents were given stiff-ish fines the other day for the practice. Twenty-three small-time hat manufacturers were arrested for this foul deed.

Child Chats

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

MANY PARENTS quite innocently permit their children to carry too heavy a burden during high school years. Here is Tommy, for example, editing the school paper and running the baseball team. At the same time he is preparing for a technical school and doing a great deal of growing, both physically and emotionally. The triple strain is pretty heavy unless he is brilliant and has an iron physique.

Of course, Tommy wants to continue his extra-curricular activities. They prove his popularity and ability. But they also take time which he should spend on either studying or relaxing. To rush about all afternoon assembling the school paper or seeing that the team is practicing is hard work. No doubt in its own way it can be good training for the future, but not if it is at the expense of his health or schooling.

The boys and girls who are not going on to college should be the ones to edit papers, manage teams, act in school plays. This is the end of their schooling, the only chance they will ever have for such activities.

Those who go on to college will have four years more in which to act and edit and manage. Meanwhile, unless they are unusually gifted they are risking both health and college course.

And even if they can and do enter college on certificate without the grind of preparing for entrance examinations, they may still have trouble in keeping up with the college work after entrance and perhaps flunk out or break down in the first year, unless in those final years at high school they have narrowed their interests very largely to studying and growing.

Prints to Be Popular Again Next Summer

Resort and cruise clothes at this time, of course, are just the winter's propehecy of what will be fashionable when the summer sun rolls 'round again. So, this is a hint not to throw away any old print dresses. If prints were good last year—and who'll dare to argue on that subject—they are going to be doubly so next summer. Not only are they showing extravagantly printed linens, but even nets and laces come in for their share of riotous variegated color.

The Federal Diary

By Samuel Lubell.

"Pig Iron"

A number of interesting items about the work of Department of Agriculture scientists have been piling up on our desk lately. Dr. L. A. Spindler, for example, has discovered that a daily teaspoonful of iron mixed in with the regular rations will do all the things for little pigs that spinach is supposed to for babies.

Maybe Walt Disney could get up a little short, titled "Pig Iron," about the Big Bad Wolf and the three little pigs, two of whom turned up their noses at their daily doses of iron and jeered their older brother (who took his iron daily and later licked the wolf) by dancing and chanting:

"Have you had your iron today,
Iron Today
Have you had your iron today,
Steel, lalalala."

Being a scientist in this irreverent world sometimes is annoying. Drs. Ralph W. Frey and Clarence W. Bebee, of the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, spent five years proving that salt treatments will lengthen the life of vegetable tanned leathers. Recently they announced their discovery, incidentally mentioning that salt absorbed from the perspiration of the hands might be the explanation of why leather bindings of books in constant use last longer than bindings of books rarely used. The newspapers, as you probably guessed, played up the side-remark, most of them completely overlooking the real scientific value of the experiments.

The A. F. of L. convention has not only indorsed the entire A. F. G. E. program, but resolutions calling for adequate safety laws for Government workers; protesting against employment of prison labor in new prison construction, and opposing the Navy Department's so-called "balanced work force" system.

The Chronicle in Augusta, Ga., gave him his first cub job . . . First big chance came with Associated press as the Southern bureau's star reporter. . . . Best (also worst) assignment was covering the Higginbotham floggings in Florida in 1921. Newspaper men had to sleep and eat in the lumber camp where the North Dakota youth had been flogged to death, and the scowls of the lumbermen were enough to kill anyone's appetite. . . .

As boom-time city editor of Miami Daily News, Irvin had a reporter on the staff by the name of Morton Milford. Later Milford headed WPA's press relations section and Irvin became his assistant. . . .

The 1926 hurricane made Florida history and Irvin made newspaper hostory by getting out the story of the hurrican in a telephone booth. . . The 100-mile gale poured buckets of rain and water into the office . . . only protected spot was the phone booth, and there the story was written. . . . Some hero in the composing room got the story into type in a single page.

That letter we published recently criticizing emergency employes has brought in this note:

"The stand you take (our reference to the letter as strong words) may be justified by some of these people, one the other hand the criticism of your correspondent is also justified.

"One case I know personally. Middle-aged woman, husband earning good money as railroad engineer; three children married and independent; home clear financially; enjoys one of the finest cars on market and trips to Florida; position gained through political pull, ability nil. Should these—or any Government jobs—provide luxuries? Or bread and butter?"

While we're asking for letters from emergency workers, let's extend the invitation to all Government workers. Every once in a while we hope to devote our entire column to letters from the customers. It's not that we want a day off, but that we really want to know what you think about things, your impressions, anything interesting you've noticed. Anything you have to say goes—all the editing of these letters will be confined solely to questions of libel and space.

Group Fights Compromise On Red Rider

Repealists Rally Forces to Insist Statute Be Eliminated.

Mrs. Norton Is Reported Seeking Only to 'Cut Teeth' of Law.

Aroused by reports that Representative Mary T. Norton, chairman of the House District Committee, plans to compromise in her fight against the red rider, friends of academic freedom in the District yesterday rallied their forces to insist upon outright repeal of the law forbidding teaching or advocacy of communism in the District schools.

"There can be no compromise," said Mrs. William Kittle, president of the District League of Women Voters. "The only way to repeal the red rider is to repeal it.

"Repeal of this vicious statute will be one of our first objectives at the next session of Congress and we do not propose to depart from our determination to insist upon outright repeal."

Mrs. Norton, at her sister's home in Pelham, N. Y., revealed that she intends to introduce a bill which would take the teeth out of the red rider, but which would provide penalties for teachers who advocated communism.

The compromise measure she has in mind, Mrs. Norton explained, would make it unnecessary for teachers to sign oaths that they had not taught or advocated communism before they received their salary checks.

Union to Be Firm.

The Teachers Union, which only two weeks ago reiterated its plea for outright repeal of the red rider, undoubtedly will stand firm against any compromise which would split hairs over the lengths to which a teacher could go discussing communism, a spokesman said.

It was recalled that soon after the red rider was sneaked into the District appropriations bill two years ago, E. Barrett Prettyman, then corporation counsel, ruled that under its provisions teachers could teach, but not advocate communism.

Rather than risk their salary checks on a legalistic interpretation of whether imparting favorable facts about communism could be construed as advocacy of that form of government, teachers abandoned the subject.

Mrs. Norton, a strong champion for outright repeal of the red rider at the last session, said she was fearful many members would not vote for the repeal bill in its original form because Representative Fred Sisson, of New York, its sponsor, was defeated for re-election.

It is her desire, Mrs. Norton said, to put through a bill which would nullify the effect of the red rider.

To Keep Chairmanship.

Mrs. Norton set as rest reports that she might abandon her District Committee chairmanship to become a member of the powerful Appropriations Committee. She said she was ready to set aside any honor which might come through service on the Appropriations Committee to continue her "fight for a square deal" for Washington.

She is determined, Mrs. Norton said, to carry through the plan which she announced at the close of the last session to abolish all standing sub-committees of the District Committee. The sub-committee method made it easy for chairmen to pigeon hole legislation with which they were out of sympathy.

First on the committee's legislative slate at the next session, Mrs. Norton said, will be a joint resolution calling for a constitutional amendment to enfranchise District citizens in national elections.

The red rider compromise measure will be next on the program, the "Lady Mayor" of the Nation's Capital announced.

Third on the committee slate will be the bill to humanize Juvenile Court procedure. Mrs. Norton promised early action on bills to legalize horse racing in the District and strengthen the anti-gambling laws.

Mrs. Norton said she would sponsor legislation to create a small claims branch of Municipal Court to handle cases involving $50 or less along the lines proposed by Judge Nathan A. Cayton.

No Winter Quarters Needed for These Naturalized Americans

It wasn't like this in sunny Africa but these three Zoo guests, Jack, the zebra; the gnu, and the grand duchess Minnie, the ostrich, have learned to like Washington's winters and don't need steam heat.

Kill Red Rider, Free Schools, Educator Asks

N. E. A. Research Director Scores 'Intolerance' of Measure.

Declaring that the function of American education is to "free the mind, not to bind it," William G. Carr, research director of the National Education Association, last night assailed the "red rider," which prohibits the teaching or advocacy of communism in Dsitrict public schools.

Addressing a large audience in First Congregational Church, the educator branded the suppressive measure and teacher oath requirements as useless, unnecessary and insulting, and said it was imperative that the "red rider" be repealed at the next session of Congress.

"The real issue involved in the 'red rider' is not the rights of teachers, but the right of the public to have an effective school program," said Carr.

He outlined the following four-point program for citizens' organizations and other civic groups "interested in protecting the rights of children to learn."

"Granting complete freedom to competent teachers to present the facts and to encourage an unbiased, tolerant discussion concerning social, economic, biologic and other issues.

"Seeking to repeal the unnecessary and insulting legislation requiring teachers to sign an oath of allegiance, and to repeal all other legislative attempts to regiment schools.

"Helping teachers to become ever more competent to exercise leadership toward high standards of public-spirited and intelligent citizenship, both within and without the classroom.

"Assisting teachers, as individuals and through their organizations, to protect their civic and professional responsibilities in connection with academic freedom."

Carr declared that in the "red rider" the forces of tyranny had gained a secure foothold in America. He said it brought American education to a "crisis of control."

"It must be decided," he added, "whether a glaring legislative threat will be left to stand as an example to the rest of the country. Anywhere else (than in the District of Columbia) the issue would be local, or at most, State-wide. Here we see it placed in the national arena."

Arguments supporting legislation requiring teachers to sign oaths of allegiance to obtain their salaries betray a false and narrow view of the public interest, he said.

"Regimentation of minority thinking by majority legislation is repugnant to the highest ideals of our form of government and of our public schools," he declared. "This is the oppression, the intolerance which darkened the days of Pasteur, of Galileo, of Socrates, of Jesus."

Cat Fanciers To Take Cage Suit Appeal

Columbian Head Declares Opposing President Unconstitutional.

Columbian Cat Fanciers, Inc., will carry their fight to regain 212 lost-strayed-or-stolen cat cages to the United States Court of Appeals, it was learned last night.

The incorporated fanciers, their suit thrown out of District Court by Justice Alfred A. Wheat, who termed their cat squabbles "disgraceful," believe they have a constitutional issue, and will fight to the end.

Announcement of their determination followed two other major developments in the local feline world yesterday. They were:

1. Ira Chase Koehne, who claims he is the real president of Columbian as opposed to the other claimant, Miss Mary Hantzmon, said he had warned by letter all people connected with a show scheduled for next Saturday and Sunday at the Hamilton Hotel that they are "aiding and abetting the misuse of a corporate name and would be liable for the consequences."

2. Motion to dismiss a replevin action to regain the cages, a second motion by Miss Hantzmon's group, will be heard today in Municipal Court.

Meanwhile Miss Hantzmon announced the show positively will go on. She said:

"We have 214 entries to date. We have had to rent four bedrooms in addition to regular facilities of the hotel, and many of the cats will stay in the bedrooms.

"We have so many entries some of the cats will have to double up—sleeping two in a cage. We have rented 185 cages.

"As to our carrying on our fight to get back the other cages, which are rightfully ours, I have only this to say: We're in the right. The court will have to decide in our favor. They're unconstitutional. Mr. Koehne is unconstitutional!"

Koehne flung back the news that his group would positively not enter their cats. "No cats on our side will participate," he exclaimed, "and we have 150 cats on our side."

Miss Dubois Dies After Brief Illness

Miss Florence DuBois, 48, statistician for the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, died Saturday at Homeopathic Hospital. She had been ill only a short time.

A native of Wichita, Kans., Miss DuBois graduated from Wellesley College in 1911. She afterward did statistical work for the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. and for the New York City Welfare Council.

Before joining the Emergency Relief Administration, Miss DuBois helped prepare the statistical report for President Hoover's committee on social funds and later worked for the NRA. She lived here at the Blackstone Hotel, 1016 Seventeenth street northwest.

Trail of 'Boots, Spurs' Robbers Points to South

Local Officer Misses Two Suspects in Trip to North Carolina.

Justice Department agents are endeavoring to trace whereabouts of two remaining members of Washington's "boots and spurs" gang in Georgia and Florida, it was learned yesterday.

Local police said the two men were believed to have been in North Carolina Saturday night and Detective Sergt. Elmer J. Lewis was sent there to apprehend them. They had left, however, before Lewis arrived and it is said they headed South.

Meanwhile, detectives questioned William Nelson Beck, 21, captured by Sergts. Robert J. Barrett, E. E. Thompson and William V. Christian, in the home of Beck's father, 939 C street southwest.

Beck, indicted as leader of the gang, is alleged to have admitted to police complicity in four daring holdups staged within the past two weeks. The other members of the gang being sought are Joseph Kurz, 19, and Paul Berger, 18.

Detectives said yesterday Beck admitted kidnaping Private Frank Ayers from a sentry post in Fort Myer November 16, taking his weapons and throwing him out of a car near Chain Bridge.

Beck also is alleged to have told detectives that he held up Michael Armaly in the New Hampshire meat market and robbed him of $352 November 20.

New 'Wonder' Train Rolls Into Capital, Is Put on Display

A monster of glittering steel rolled silently into Union Station last night, hailed by railroad officials as the Utopia of modern rail transportation.

Pride of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad's new twin "Zephyrs," this diesel-powered, stainless steel train was brought to Washington for a public exhibition at the terminal yards today.

Speeding from the Midwest to Philadelphia and then into the Capital over tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad, the new "wonder train" was met in Baltimore by a group of local transportation officials and newspapermen.

Its seven cars, illuminated by indirect lighting and each with a separate color scheme, move along the tracks as a single unit. The powerful motor-driven engine is the only detachable car.

In addition to ultra-modern day coaches and parlor cars, the streamlined train carries a lounge car with complete bar, dining salon and observation club car. Every passenger is assured of de luxe accommodations.

Zoo Ostrich, Baboon, Zebra Can Take Washington Winter

Minnie, Grand Duchess of Gardens' Birds, and Her Mates From Tropics Acclimated to Rigors Here; Tapir Now Likes to Play in Snow.

No hot-house animals are the tropical beasts pictured yesterday at the Zoo. They're all set, as December 1 approaches, for a long winter outdoors.

The Grand Duchess Minnie, the ostrich, despite her endless yards of neck, which hasn't even a pin-feather—let alone a boa—to warm it, will strut the lonely winter hours away in snow such as she never had to put up with in Africa.

But the Grand Duchess can take it. She's been taking it for 18 years now, and showing a lot more adaptability to climatic vicissitudes than most of the hundreds of Washingtonians who yesterday came to admire her.

Oliver the baboon is another African who doesn't seem to mind snow. Oliver will make snowballs as soon as the season provides him with materials, and sit on his pants which have the seat out, oblivious to them and other such small matters such as zero weather.

Lived Outside 21 Years.

Oliver's predecessor, a baboon by the name of Jack, which was short for Chacma, lived out of doors the year round for 21 years, which, for a baboon, is some kind of a record, according to Zoo Director William M. Mann.

Izadore, the zebra, wears a spectacular coat which is of the same thickness winter and summer. But he and his pals have forgotten all about the hot burning suns of the African veldt. They say that if women can survive with silk stockings the year around, they have no kick coming.

The gnus are also tough. Having a name like theirs is enough to make them callous. But they at least have beards to keep their chins warm. And they are sort of gnuts, anyhow.

Tapir an Eccentric.

But the prize eccentric is Ralph, the Brazilian tapir. He has no more hair than an egg and was born in a sweltering swamp near the Equator.

Philosophical about life, he makes the best of things, and even enjoys playing in the snow after 25 years of it, and when in the mood he eats a little.

Dr. Mann had no explanation of how they do it. He said he was no physiologist. Numerous tropical birds stay out the year around without ill effect.

The tail to this story is that seals from the Arctic are very susceptible to colds, usually dying after less than eight years here—from pneumonia.

Evangelistic Rites Open.

had appealed to the "experts," replied:

"We are anxious that you will not get on to the idea that gold is of no use and will continue to buy it from us."

Emphasizing that Canada has adopted an independent role within the Empire, Miss MacPhail, in reply to questions, said she was confident the Dominion would not follow England into war under a prearranged agreement as it did in 1914.

"Canada has a different attitude now," she said. "If Great Britain became embroiled in an imperialistic war, I feel almost positive Canada would remain aloof and adopt an attitude of passive belligerency."

Huston Thompson, chairman of the board of trustees, presided at the meeting. Members of the panel in addition to Durand and Simpson were Alexander V. Dye, director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and William E. Armstrong, former professor of international relations at American University.

Miller Hails A New Era For Religion

Preaching Mission Held Cause of Awakening in Washington.

National City Christian Pastor Acclaims 'United Voice.'

Crediting the National Preaching Mission which conducted services in Washington last week with achieving its purpose, Dr. Raphael Harwood Miller, pastor of National City Christian Church, yesterday hailed the advent of an era of religious fervor.

"Never during my ministry have I seen the people so anxious to hear the message of Christ," said Dr. Miller, reviewing his experiences with the Preaching Mission.

"The National Preaching Mission has given a new resonance to the united voice of the Christian Church and has brought a new consciousness of the power of the Gospel of Christ."

The minister said the mission brought to Washington "many soul-stirring addresses that will long bear fruit as we bend our forces to keeping America Christian."

"This week more than 150 churches in Washington are conducting simultaneous evangelistic services to carry on the attempt to bring about a spiritual awakening in America and in Washington," he continued.

"We are facing serious social, economic and international problems. We are interested in all of these. But we are also convinced that we are not likely to get far in the solution of these problems until we have gone much deeper in cultivating personal relationship with God and coming into fellowship with Jesus Christ. If Christianity is to advance there must be a rekindling of the spiritual life of individuals."

Dr. Miller is planning special services in his church for each night this week with the exception of tonight and Saturday.

Mrs. Leahy Rites To Be Tomorrow

Mrs. Mary A. S. Leahy, 77, wife of Dr. Daniel C. Leahy, died late Saturday at her residence, 1348 Monroe street northwest.

Mrs. Leahy was born June 14, 1859, in Columbia, Pa., but lived most of her life in Washington. She belonged to the Columbia Chapter, No. 15, Order of Eastern Star and was its treasurer for several years. She also was active in the Methodist Church.

Surviving are her husband, a daughter, Mrs. Myra L. Spencer, and two grandchildren, Arline and Aubrey Spencer, all of Washington.

Funeral services will be at 1:30 p. m. tomorrow in the Hines funeral chapel, 2901 Fourteenth street northwest. The Rev. Harry W. Goddard, of First Congregational Church, will officiate.

Childhood Romance Capped.

Cumberland, Md.—A romance of Allegany High School culminated Saturday with the marriage of Miss Eleanor Andrews, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Andrews, and Vincent P. DeLaGrange, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis DeLaGrange. Dr. Vernon N. Andrews, pastor of Center Street Methodist Episcopal Church, officiated.

From Cholly Knickerbocker's column, November 24: "I'm getting just a wee bit tired with the small army of fakes who suddenly reveal that they knew Wallis Simpson 'when.' Her happy romance with the English ruler has provided the 'name flingers' with a veritable field day. FINANCE DEPT.: Every week when Gene Fowler receives his salary check from Fox-Twentieth Century he calls up Darryl Zanuck . . . "Hello, Darryl," Fowler purrs, "God bless Shirley Temple."

MOVIE DEPT.: Arthur Kober has written a play called "Having Wonderful Time." It concerns a Catskill Mountain resort — and Kober is having difficulty finding an actress with a Yiddish accent to play the lead . . . He approaches one of Sam Goldwyn's agents and kidded: "Maybe I can borrow Merle Oberon from Goldwyn to play the role?" . . . "If you can hold off a while," the agent assured, "say—two more years with Goldwyn and Merle will be ideal."

HEALTH DEPT.: Dr. Nat Leifmet Dr. Leo Michel and each complained about suddenly not feeling well . . . "What shall we do?" Michel asked . . . "There's only one thing to do," Lief answered. "Let's call in a patient."

WAR NEWS: Tommy Manville met a young man who allegedly had made slighting remarks about him. "Better be careful," Manville warned, "or I'm liable to sue you. You know why?" . . . "Yes," the thrice divorced Manville was told. "Because you want to know how it feels to be a plaintiff for a change."

Edgar Bergen, the ventriloquist, attended the Coward premiere and was asked: "How does it look to you?" . . . "It looks," Bergen replied, "like America is annexing England—actor by actor."*

ILLUSTRATED SECTION: A movie press agent went to a local city room and placed a photo of his client on the editor's desk. "This is worth a picture in the papers," the publicist spieled. "This star—a great movie star—is canceling her movie contract and will appear in a legitimate play. Giving up a film career for the stage. Is that news?" . . . "Yes," the editor yawned, "Flea Bites Dog!"

In HOLLYWOOD With Jimmy Fiddler

George Stone's Start.

Hollywood, Nov. 30.

In all my years, I have heard no story more poignant than that which George E. Stone's life unfolds. He was born in Russian Poland, a Jew. At the age of 6 he worked in a silk mill for 5 cents a week. I repeat, 5 cents a week! On his way home one night with this pittance clutched in his hand, he was cut down by the sword of a Cossack during a pogrom.

DIETRICH.

He spent the next ten days in a dark prison cell, a horrible wound in his head (he still bears the scar). Released, he crawled home, three miles, through snow and ice.

His father (who had come to America) once sent the family a pineapple, such a delicacy that on Sundays each child was given a taste no larger than the end of your thumb. When the father at last saved enough money to bring his brood to America, smugglers took most of it to sneak them across the border. Even so, George's mother waded waist-deep through icy streams, carrying him on her shoulders. Worst break of all, when they reached Ellis Island they were turned back because one sister had an eye disease. Back in Poland again, the mother died from the hardships of the journey. Later, the children made the trip alone.

Today, Stone's income is $50,000 annually. A few weeks ago I wrote of his contributions to Boy Scout organizations throughout the land. It was after reading my tribute to his kindness toward poor children that George told me, voice trembling, why he is ever ready to heed pleas of indigent youngsters. The "Why" is the story I have just given you.

I will not go so far as to say Marlene Dietrich is the most unpopular actress among set workers, but neither is she most beloved. Director Richard Boleslawski recently megaphoned "Legs," and the other morning he gave me this explanation of her failure to get along with her film troupes:

There is not a branch of the business she does not understand. She can tell every man on the set how to do his job. What is more, she does tell him. What burns the men is that 80 per cent of the time she is correct.

Boley told me one of Miss Dietrich's tricks, worked during filming of "The Garden of Allah." She always looked at the daily rushes, and on several occasions she approached leading man Charles Boyer and cried, "There is one take in today's rushes in which you are marvelous! Be sure to ask Boley to use it!" Boyer, until he aroused to the trick, always hiked to the director. It was some time before he learned that while he might look all right in the particular take recommended by Marlene, she always looked her best.

Subscription Seats Still Available at National; Twins to Get Break at Loew's Capitol Next Week

Four More American Society Bills to Come; Miss Cornell Has Faith in "The Wingless Victory;" Gladys Swarthout Ill in New York; "Gypsies," Soviet Film, Comes to Belasco Wednesday; Odds and Ends of the Day's Theater News.

SUBSCRIBERS to the current season of the American Theater Society of Washington have two holiday treats in store for them. The first will be Max Gordon's presentation of Robert Edmond Jones' production of Shakespeare's "Othello," starring Walter Huston, announced for the National Theater the week of Monday, December 14; the second, a post-Christmas production of the London success, "The Two Mrs. Carrolls," with Frances Starr and Earl Larimore in the leading roles, scheduled for the National the week of December 28.

BELL.

Even with more than 5,200 subscribers on the society's lists for the present season, it still is possible to obtain desirable seat locations, both in the balcony and on the orchestra floor, for the four remaining plays of the Theater Guild-American Theater Society season. These subscriptions seats are sold at a pro rata reduction under the society's regular policy. Seats for the remaining plays may be articled for at the offices of the society in the National Theater any week-day afternoon between the hours of 12 and 5.

In addition to the two plays named, there are still to come Katharine Hepburn in the Theater Guild's production of "Jane Eyre" and one other still to be announced.

Because those quaintly idiotic buffoons, Laurel and Hardy, run across their twin brothers in "Our Relations," their latest full-length screen comedy, coming to Loew's Capitol on Friday, Master Ray Bell—no relation—Manager Gene Ford and probably others of the Capitol executives have put their heads together and doped out another one! Since the twin motif may be said to dominate the picture, it has been decided to admit all bona fide twins to see the frolic free. All that will be necessary is to present yourself in duplicate and rely upon physical resemblance for gratuitous admission to the theater. Thus, says the Mr. Bell who is no relation—and he could be drawn and quartered for this one—comes about a complete refutation of Mr. Kipling's insistence that "East is East and West is West and never the twins shall meet!"

Katharine Cornell, if one more reversion to her premiere engagement in Maxwell Anderson's "The Wingless Victory," at the National last week, may be permitted, has complete faith in the dramatic and literary integrity of her new vehicle. She looks upon it as perhaps the most powerful of the original, contemporary plays in which she has appeared.

This was disclosed to your reporter during a brief but extremely cordial visit in her dressing room following the fall of the final curtain on last Friday night. Particularly emphatic was Miss Cornell in her refusal to recognize any suggestion of anticlimax in the last act of "The Wingless Victory."

On that point, we were in instant agreement, because I, too, am unable to detect anticlimax in a situation that culminates a tragic drama with such infinite pathos and hopeless futility as to bring about the death of four people driven to desperation by the cruel intolerance of their fellows.

The last act of the Anderson drama is not so violent in speech as the second, but it is tremendously more moving. Perhaps the charge of anticlimax was predicated, by those who made it, upon the flimsy basis of volume of sound.

With the reception accorded her latest effort by the Washington public, Miss Cornell was greatly impressed. We were one who chided her mildly a season ago for not having played "Romeo and Juliet" here two weeks and one in Philadelphia, instead of the other way around, and on Friday night she was a little inclined to coincide with our view.

"The Wingless Victory" still has four weeks on the road before opening in New York, in the Empire Theater, on December 23. It is playing this week in Pittsburgh and goes thence, in turn, to Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit.

Included in Saturday night's standing-room audience at the National were Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt and party. Mrs. Roosevelt was a backstage visitor to Miss Cornell's dressing room after the performance

Although some of the more precipitate society departments of the Sabbath press went on at great length upon the active part taken by Gladys Swarthout, opera and screen star, and her husband, Frank Chapman, in the dinner festivities sponsored by Mr. Ulysses Grant Smith, at the Sulgrave Club Saturday night, and the later Garrett ball, Miss Swarthout, of course, was not in Washington for either occasion, having been confined to her New York apartment by illness last Friday. "Miss Swarthout caught cold and was so ill physicians refused to permit her to leave her bed on Friday," is the way the wire received by this desk put it. The diva's illness was brought on in part by extreme fatigue induced by her latest starring role in "Champagne Waltz," just completed in Hollywood.

Dots and Dashes.

"Gypsies," a Soviet film production, starring Lala Chernaya, of the gypsy theater, Romany, in Moscow, will open on the screen of the Belasco Theater on Wednesday of this week, December 2 . . . Many of the supporting cast are members of a gypsy tribe now settled in the Ukraine . . . Incidentally, the Romany is the only gypsy theater in existence and was established by the U. S. S. R. to preserve to the world the unique contributions of the gypsies to the arts of the theater and the dance . . . When Hugh Walpole, noted writer and lecturer, steps out upon the platform at Constitution Hall on Thursday night at 8:30, he will discuss both novel-writing and motion pictures . . . His topic will be "The Novel and the Film—Some Personal Adventures in Both" . . . When you visit the Capitol, Palace or Columbia, have the usher give you one of those "Screen Forecast" pocket-size booklets . . . There will be a good deal of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer puffing in it, but also there will be something about 30 cash prizes, totaling $500 . . . Not worth it, with Christmas almost here? . . . Don't be sill! . . . They are screening "Born to Dance," in the Fox Film Exchange projection room tomorrow at 1:30 . . . I know one Eleanor Powell fan who can hardly wait . . . By the way, get Sam Wheeler, Washington manager for Twentieth Century-Fox, and Joe Kaliski, serving in the same capacity for Gaumont British, into an argument some time and listen to them—of all people—tell you why the cinema still is a nickelodeon! . . . And there I was trying to give it a big-time rating . . . Well, we live and learn—but sometimes not much from arguments such as the film boys advanced!

"ROBERTA." RKO-Radio picturization of the musical comedy based on Alice Duer Miller's "Gowns by Roberta" starring Irene Dunne, with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, Randolph Scott, Helen Westley, Claire Dodd and Victor Varconi. Book and lyrics by Otto Harbach, with additional lyrics by Dorothy Fields. Music by Jerome Kern. Screen play by Jane Murfin, Sam Mintz and Allan Scott, with additional dialogue by Glenn Tryon. Directed by William A. Seiter. Reviewed (revival) by W. A. Whitney.

Many musicals have come and gone, and more in the future will come and go, but few will have those qualities of entertainment that are to be found in "Roberta."

After being a musical comedy of no little merit and a motion picture to set at the time of its playing many a boxoffice record, there is precious little to add at this time.

With Irene Dunne, supported by Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, Helen Westley, Randolph Scott and others; with music by Jerome ("Smoke Gets in Your Eyes") Kern, there is little more that the season's amusement seeker could ask.

And, too, ladies, that swelegant style show will probably be as appealing today as it was when first the picture was shown.

Selected short subjects round out the program.

Having scored tremendous personal triumphs as the bluff and uncouth King Henry VIII, the doggedly determined Javert in "Les Miserables," the brutal Capt. Bligh in "Mutiny on the Bounty" and other rugged characters, Charles Laughton next will come to the screen in the title role of "Rembrandt." His likeness, in the role of the great artist appears above. "Rembrandt" will be the next attraction at the RKO-Keith Theater.

Bride-to-Be By Vida Hurst

CHAPTER XXI.

A week later Becky's father was taken back into his former office. He acted like a man reprieved from the death sentence. His family had not dreamed how deeply he had been hurt until he was reinstated. The twins stared wide-eyed at the sight of their staid, dignified parent tossing his hat in the air, shouting, "Josephine, come here! I've some news for you."

Becky and her mother came running from the kitchen.

"They're taking me back," Mr. Stern declared. "At the same salary. The district manager said if I would be as loyal to him as I was to my old chief he'd have no reason to regret it. It seems every man in the office had signed a petition asking him to let me come back. I was dumbfounded. When Foster telephoned me to drop in I had no idea anything like this was in the offing."

Nothing Else Planned.

"You don't want to go," his wife reminded him. "You said you'd rather be shot than go back into that office without a position."

"Can you blame me?" he smiled. "Well, this shows what your friends can do for you."

He turned to Becky with his eyes full of tears. "You know we've Foster to thank. They tell me it was his idea."

"It's wonderful, father! I'm so glad."

"This means you can stop working for Mr. Rhodes," he said, "and take a vacation before you start looking for something else."

If she married Foster she wouldn't have to find another position. Her father, reading her mind, said, "Unless you've something else planned."

She answered uncertainly, "Nothing else yet."

Later when the twins were in bed he said, "It would make us very happy if we thought you cared enough for Foster to marry him."

"I'm not in love with him," she said, but color was high on her cheeks.

"I'm not urging you to marry anyone," he explained, "but Foster will certainly make some girl a fine husband."

Mrs. Stern said gently, "You're young yet. There's no hurry."

But Becky knew that they had discussed the possibility and, because she had always loved and trusted them, their approval of Foster as a husband swayed her judgment in his favor.

Same Hopes.

Foster was sweet. He was fine and clean and wholesome. They had fun together. He was ambitious and intelligent and was sure to be a success. Becky had no illusions about her own career as a business woman. While she had enjoyed being independent she had no desire to be a secretary for the rest of her life. Her hopes for the future were, like Foster's, for a home and children. She realized that she could wait for years and not find anyone better suited to her in every respect except the simple fact that they were not in love with each other.

Was love so important as she had always thought? Probably not, she decided, yet two months later when Foster asked for his answer she pleaded for more time.

"I want to be sure," she told him.

He smiled and kissed her lightly on the cheek.

"All the time you want, Becky dear! We've a lifetime in front of us."

Several days after this conversation Regina dropped into the office. It was the hour Mr. Rhodes spent at home resting and Regina knew it. She stood at the window for a moment then she asked, "Is Philip here?"

"Not that I know of," Becky replied, wondering what was in Regina's mind now. Because that there was some reason back of the question she did not doubt. She was right. Presently Regina said, "There's something I'd like to ask you."

No Use.

"There's no use my saying anything to Philip," Regina admitted. "He's too damned cagey to give anyone any information, but perhaps you'll tell me?"

"What?" the girl demanded bluntly.

"Are you two seeing as much of each other since you've come back to the factory?"

Becky's face was pale but she managed to control her voice.

"I don't think you have any right to ask me that, Mrs. Little."

Regina replied coldly, "After the way you've interfered with the lives of my family I've every right."

"What do you mean?"

"Do you think I don't know why my brother married that fool of a Stubby? You weren't satisfied to come between Lelia and Philip. What a silly, little vamp you must be!"

"It isn't true," Becky denied. "But I don't know that it matters to me what you think. I'm working for your father, not you."

"Quite true. If he'd listen to me you'd have been fired long ago. I've suspected for some time that Philip was intending to marry you."

Becky's start of surprise did not escape her.

"So it's true? I thought there was something funny about his furnishing an apartment."

"I'm very busy now, Mrs. Little."

"You won't tell me then?"

"Why should I?"

Settles Matter.

"I can tell you one thing," Regina stated without passion. "If you do marry him, don't expect mother and me to do anything for you."

Becky smiled.

"Social position is not as important to me as it is to you."

"You may not think so now but you'll see how far you'll get as Mrs. Philip Rhodes without us."

"A lot that would worry me if I could have him," Becky thought. She had the cold comfort of knowing that at least Regina did not realize that she was not still seeing him. She would have to return to her mother and Lelia without the information she had sought.

But as she left the office Becky was thinking, "This settles it. I'm not going on here any longer. Let them think what they like. I'm through and I'm going to tell Mr. Rhodes so just as soon as he gets back."

Gayety

"MODES AND MODELS." Independent Burlesque Association production in two acts and 27 scenes, featuring Amy Fong, supported by Jack Lamont, Al Hillier, Billy Wallace, Johnny Head, Jerry Brandow, Harry Ryon, Louise Phelps, Sunny Day, Marion LaMarr and the Dancing Bryanettes. Staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by W. A. Whitney.

The East (east of what, we would not be too sure) comes to the Gayety Theater this week in the charming paradster, Amy Fong, adding a pleasing Orietnal flavor to the usual array of revelatory artistes. Weak of voice and not too long on dance, Miss Fong, nevertheless, is amply endowed with personality, after the fashion of Ann Corio, and proceeds to become at one fel swoop a decided hit.

The "baby doll of burlesque," Louise Phelps, and Marion LaMarr contribute other meaningful movements to make this aspect of the program entirely glamorous.

Strong on Comedy.

Increasing the complement of comics, Col. James J. Lake presents Jack Lamont, Dialectician Al Hilier and clownish Billy ("Scratch") Wallace, who, abetted by John Head and Harry Ryon, as the capable straight men, give top-notch accounts of themselves, offering a variety of sketches which, although lacking a little in novelty, are fast and funny, keeping the customers constantly amused.

Sunny Day and Jerry Brandow team up for some dance routines, which are rousingly greeted. Mr. Head, in fine voice, sings a goodly number of ballads. Miss Day has a nicely turned acrobatic routine. The Dancing Bryanettes, under Col. Lake's colorful staging, contribute fine ensemble effects, statuesque as well as terpsichorean.

Loew Managers Dust Off Their S. R. O. Signs

Screen Attractions Booked for Early Showing Are Among Year's Best.

Though Thanksgiving has passed, Loew managers in the Capital maintain that movie-goers have much to be thankful for in the entertainment menu that is still to be served in the Capitol, Palace and Columbia Theaters, through December and the months to follow. A bountiful cinematic feast, savored with stars and stories of popular appeal, is to be served for the delectation of theatergoers.

The first item on this movie menu is "Born to Dance," scheduled to follow "Love on the Run" at Loew's Palace. Seven Cole Porter song hits, Eleanor Powell, Una Merkel, Virginia Bruce, James Stewart, Sid Silvers, comely chorines, lavish production numbers and sprightly comedy are some of the many ingredients this new M-G-M musical boasts.

Then there is that widely awaited "Camille," bringing Garbo and the romantic hero of the day, Robert Taylor. "Camille" has had many days of glory, but never, it is said, such as the combination of Glamorous Garbo and Taylor, the Titan, give it.

Dietrich and Technicolor.

Romance carries on again in "Garden of Allah" that has Marlene Dietrich and Charles Boyer as its love makers. This picture is cited not alone for its story and stars, but also because it represents the foremost advance in Technicolor to date.

Marked for Christmas merriment, is "After the Thin Man," a siege of hilarity and domestic delight which brings back William Powell and Myrna Loy in the same roles they made famous in "The Thin Man." Asta, that lovable wire-haired terrier, James Stewart and Ellisa Landi are other principals. Dashiel Hammett wrote this sequel to his first success that started the vogue in lunacy of a popular brand.

Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy will again match their glorious voices in "Maytime," which promises an abundance of melody and romance.

An Odd Triumvirate.

Freddie Bartholomew, Spencer Tracy and Lionel Barrymore form a strange triumvirate in the screen version of "Captains Courageous," a story that is said to pack all of the stirring adventure, drama and romance of "Mutiny on the Bounty."

Widely heralded is another Fredie Bartholomew hit, "Lloyds of London," with an all-star supporting cast.

Barbara Stanwyck and Joel McRea are co-starred in "Banjo on My Knee," a great drama with music, said to possess the same elemental force that kept "Tobacco Road" on Broadway for three years. Helen Westley, Buddy Ebsen, Walter Brennan, Tony Martin, Katherine DeMille, Walter Catlett and the Hall Johnson Choir are other features of this Nunnally Johnson screen play.

Miss Temple, Too.

Shirley Temple promises to captivate her large army with new accomplishments in "Stowaway."

The voices of Gladys Swarthout and Frank Forest will be blended in the gay musical "Champagne Waltz," which has Fred MacMurray, Jack Oakie and others in its cast.

Merle Oberon, Brian Aherne and David Niven will be seen in "Beloved Enemy;" Lawrence Tibbett sings again in "Under Your Spell," and Eddie Cantor's coming in "Pony Boy."

That will give you just a rough idea!

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Concert by the National Symphony Orchestra, under Hans Kindler, in Constitution Hall Sunday afternoon. Program: Grave and Allegro from Organ Concerto in G major (Bach), Smyphony in D minor (Franck), "On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring" (Delius), Intermezzo from "Goyescas" (Granados), "The Enchanted Lake" (Lyadov), Polonaise from "Evgen Onegin" (Chaikovski.

Seeking an analogy for the two halves of yesterday's program, one could go farther and fare worse than to call them expositions of sacred and profane music. Although neither the Bach concerto nor the Franck symphony were composed for purposes of ritual worship, their ideational content is so noble and aspiring as to be essentially religious. When at the organ console, Bach was always in an exalted state, as though dedicating the meditations of his heart through the work of his hands. While the form might be secular, the motivation was consistently reverent.

When one is in need of spiritual quickening, a hearing of the Franck symphony is a salutary experience. Those who listen to it with the ear of intuition cannot fail to be enheartened by its message of faith, for it is one of the most powerful of lay sermons ever preached in music. It expresses with the utmost sincerity the condition of the spirit best by dubieties and emerging triumphantly from their entanglements.

This symphony reminds one of Jo Davidson's statement: "Art is a collaboration between the artist and God; the less there is of the artist, the greater the art." The music is as unworldly as Franck's own nature, as free from egocentric ambition and self-glorification. It voices only those thoughts which are concerned with the values of the spiritual life.

The transition from this lofty plane to the mundane and picturesque part of the program was managed very well by Hans Kindler with his choice of the Delius poem. This lovely meditation on the coming of spring is like the "sweetly solemn thought" of the hymnal, and illustrates Wordsworth's idea that poetry is the expression of emotion recollected in transquility.

From this reverie in the English countryside the concert proceeded to the languorous passion of Spain in the Granados intermezzo, and then to the terrain of Russia in the shimmering fantasy of Lyadov's "Enchanted Lake" and the impeuous polonaise by Chaikovski.

Recalled at the close, Dr. Kindler addressed the audience with a word of farewell on the eve of the orchestra's tour, and directed as a parting gift the sallors' dance from Glier's ballet, "Krasni Mak."

MRS. ELY CULBERTSON ON CONTRACT

A Ghastly Double.

In an all-expert game only about 1 slam out of 30, voluntarily bid, will be doubled by the opponents. This is not to say that anything like 29 out of 30 slam bids are actually fulfilled. But since it is the rarest thing in the world for two first-class partners to go down more than a trick on slam bids, defenders very properly refrain from doubling, on the theory that the "percentages" are all against them. Certainly the double gives some information, and even trump tricks that are apparently certain have been known to vanish when subjected to the most masterly attack. Needless to say, the player who doubled seven spades in today's hand was not an expert.

North, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ 7 6 2 ♡ K Q 6 ◇ A K 8 2 ♣ Q J 5
♠ 8 ♡ A J 8 4 2 ◇ 9 4 3 ♣ 9 7 3 2	North West East South	♠ 4 3 ♡ 10 7 5 3 ◇ 10 6 5 ♣ 10 8 6 4
	♠ A K Q J 10 9 5 ♡ 9 ◇ Q J 7 ♣ A K

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
2 N T	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	7 ♠	Dbl.
Pass	Pass	7 N T	Dbl.
Pass	Pass	Redbl.	Pass
Pass	Pass

South's bidding, paradoxically enough, was both very good and very bad. It is possible, of course, that he and his partner were not using the Four-Five Notrump Convention, and that, therefore, he did not have this perfect means of determining whether North's opening bid had included two aces or not. A four notrump bid, instead of the spade rebid (assuming the convention were being used) would elicit a five diamond sign-off from North, and then South, sure that there was an ace off the hand, could well have contented himself with a small slam in spades. It must be admitted, however, that with West's invaluable assistance, he made an even greater killing on the hand than he was entitled to.

When he heard the double of seven spades, he could be certain beyond any reasonable doubt that West held an ace, since he could not possibly hold a trump trick. That decided, it was a simple matter for South to get the ace-holder off the lead by returning to the notrump contract, first bid by North. This, of course, would put East on lead, and in the highly unenviable position of having to make the correct guess. While it is true that North's diamond bid reduced this guess to no worse than a 50-50 chance between the unbid suits of hearts and clubs, this was certainly a great deal better than virtually conceding defeat by allowing East to open the ace under his thumb.

South's redouble was merely a matter of playing the percentages. He knew that his partner might make a light opening bid but never "psyched," and that being the case, he was absolutely marked with at least the king of hearts in addition to the ace and king of diamonds. Therefore, the contract could never go down more than one trick—an additional 200 points—whereas, if East guessed wrong there was an excellent chance to make 440 more points than would accrue to seven notrump doubled.

Little Theater

"OF HUMAN BONDAGE." RKO-Radio picturization of a story by W. Somerset Maugham, with screen play by Lester Cohen, starring Leslie Howard and Bette Davis, supported by Frances Dee, Kay Johnson, Alan Hale, Reginald Denny, Reginald Owen, Reginald Sheffield and Desmond Roberts. Directed by John Cromwell. Reviewed (revival) by W. A. Whitney.

A decidedly unlovely story which, paradoxical as it may seem, is beautifully presented, "Of Human Bondage" plays a return visit to Washington, opening at the Little Theater yesterday.

The story of Philip Carey who loved but one woman, Mildred, who had many loves, is one not pleasant to contemplate, but the manner in which Leslie Howard and Bette Davis limn these two major roles makes this one of the most impressive pictures of many seasons.

Starkly written by W. Somerset Maughham and just as starkly presented, "Of Human Bondage" is a picture that all followers of the cinematographic art should see. It might well be seen many times, for here is one of Mr. Howard's most sensitive portrayals and the performance by Miss Davis that should have won her the Academy Award a year before she received it.

In the supporting cast are Frances Dee, Kay Johnson, Alan Hale, Desmond Roberts and the three Reginalds, Denny, Owen and Sheffield.

The program is rounded out by "On Brazil," a traveltalk of the country now much in the news; "Cobweb Hotel," a clever Technicolor cartoon, and an issue of the "Dumbbell Letters."

St. Vincent Team 67 Points Better Than Minnesota.

By Paul Mickelson.
Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, Nov. 29.—Backtracking the wooziest and dizziest college football season within memory of player, coach and fan:

Biggest upset—Giant killers were so active that upsets looked like setups, but the Dukes of Duquesne pulled the neatest trick of the year by beating mighty Pittsburgh, 7 to 0. Six days later, after staging a celebration that rocked Pittsburgh town, the Dukes toppled like so many humpty dumpties as little West Virginia Wesleyan beat them, 2 to 0.

Georgia caused something of a sensation by tying Fordham and making the Rams' famous "seven blocks of granite" line look like papier mache and along came New York University, beaten 60 to 0 by Ohio State, which was beaten by Pittsburgh, which was tied by Fordham, to kick the Rams out of the undefeated ranks, 7 to 6.

Arithmetic—The sage who claimed figures don't lie never saw college football. Scores of the 1936 season can be so twisted as to make a score of small teams champions of the Nation. Our nomination for the undisputed title is St. Vincent's College of some 400 students located at Latrobe, Pa. Here's how the St. Vincent's Bearcats won the crown.

The Bearcats beat West Virginia Wesleyan, 6 to 0; the Wesleyans beat Duquesne, which beat Pitt, which beat Notre Dame, which beat Northwestern, which beat Minnesota, which beat Washington, which won the Far West Rose Bowl bid role by defeating Washington State, 40 to 0. By such process of arithmetic, the Bearcats could lick Minnesota, 67 to 0. They could whip the Washington Huskies, 74 to 0, and hold a track meet at poor Washington State's expense to the merry tune of 114 to 0.

If the Huskies know what's good for them in the Rose Bowl business, they'll invite some "weaker" team like Louisiana State or Alabama and forget about the Bearcats.

Greatest comeback . . . The Georgia Crackers were the comeback team of the campaign. They warmed up by beating Mercer and Furman and then hit the skids, falling before L. S. U., 47 to 7; Rice, 13 to 6; Auburn, 20 to 13, and Tennessee, 46 to 0. Quit? Back they came to beat Florida, Tulane and Georgia Tech and tie Fordham.

Dick Riffle was the comeback of the year. Last season the Albright College touchdown maker was among the scoring leaders of the East. This year, he was far down the list but back he came to score eight touchdowns in his last two games to win the scoring title with 84 points. For coaches, gloomy Gil Dobie came back at the helm of Boston College, losing only to Temple.

Mystery team . . . Notre Dame won that nomination by a mile. After losing to Pittsburgh and Navy, the Irish came back to trim Army and Northwestern with surprising ease.

Biggest disappointment . . . that was Georgia Tech. The Techs rolled up 147 points while holding Presbyterian, Sewanee and Kentucky scoreless in their first three games but won only one of their remaining seven games.

Personality . . . the winningest coach off the field was Harry Stuhldreher of Wisconsin. His Badgers didn't win a Big Ten game, but the Wisconsin alumni and students went wild about Harry. The word is out: "Watch the Badgers in '37."

Scalpers' Heaven . . . the boys who speculate on pasteboards did their biggest business at the Army-Notre Dame game, getting $50 for a pair of $4.40 tickets without trouble.

The Winnah . . . operators of football pools had their richest year. Tie games and upsets were like money from home—for the pool operators.

Biggest laugh . . . the Milk Peddler, who tried to get Princeton fans to give up whisky for milk at the Princeton-Yale game.

P. S. He didn't.

14,000 See 6-Day Bike Race Begin

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 29.—Before a crowd of 14,000 fans, said to be the largest turnout ever for the opening night of this semiannual event, the 1936 international six-day bicycle race got under way in Madison Square Garden tonight, with a field of 15 teams.

Jimmy Durante, the comedian, fired the opening gun to start the 30 riders off on the long whirl at 9 p. m. The race ends Saturday night, after the field will have toured the ten-lap course between 2,000 and 2,500 miles.

Pedalers from seven nations started. Favorites were such combinations as the German pair of Gustav Kilian and Heinz Vopel; the French team of Emile Ignat and Emile Diot, who ended the Kilianvopel nine-race winning streak in the recent Chicago grind; Alf Letourner and Marcel Gumbretiere of France; Cecil Yates and Jerry Rodman, Chicago; Jimmy Walthour of New York and his Boston partner, Al Crossley, and Torchy Peden of Canada and Bobby Thomas, Kenosha, Wis.

Washington-Jefferson Cancels Army Game

Washington Pros Stop Wright—But Not Soon Enough

Post Staff Photo—Goodwin.

Ted Wright, crack halfback of the Baltimore Orioles, goes through the Washington line for a short gain in yesterday's Dixie League game at Griffith Stadium. Pepco Barry (No. 4) and Gene Augusterfer, (No. 90) are about to bring him down. The Pros, however, didn't stop Wright soon enough, for he got away for a 99-yard touchdown run on the opening kick-off as his mates won a 13-to-7 victory.

Orioles Defeat District Pros By 13 to 7

Wright Runs 90 Yds. With Kick-Off; Reisse Goes 20 Yds. With Long Pass.

Two spectacular scoring plays, one a 90-yard return of the opening kick-off for a touchdown by Ted Wright, gave the Baltimore Orioles a 13-7 victory over the Washington Pros in a thrill-packed Dixie League game yesterday at Griffith Stadium.

A slim crowd of 1,200 fans saw the eventual winners roll up a 13-0 lead in the first half and then stave off two Washington scoring threats in the final period to clinch the honors. It was one of the best and fastest league games of the season.

Held to a 7-7 tie by the Pros last week in Baltimore and almost defeated, the Orioles lost no time launching yesterday's triumphant parade. Wright gathered in Benner's kick-off on his own 10-yard line and gliding diagonally behind perfect interference that arose en masse to clear his way, sprinted over the goal-line without an alien hand touching him. Masters failed to convert the point-after-touchdown.

Reisse Scores on Pass.

The second and decisive score was made by Reisse, Baltimore end, who caught Master's 40-yard pass over his shoulder on the dead run beyond Washington's secondary, and ran the remaining 20 yards to the goal line. This time Masters, former Penn star, made good with a perfect placement.

A third-period rally, with the old Maryland passing combination of Dick Nelson to Willis Benner functioning smoothly, produced the Pros' lone touchdown. It was a flat 10-yard pass, which Benner took in stride and romped 45 yards over the goal line. Wright almost brought him down on the 20-yard stripe near the sidelines, but Benner neatly faked him out of the way and continued his jaunt unmolested. He added the extra point with a placement.

The Pros had numerous other scoring opportunities, two penetrating as far as the 12 and 9 yard lines, but their threats never materialized. An unwillingness to rely on a potent running attack when within spitting distance of the goal was the primary reason for their failure to score.

The game marked the professional debut of Ray Hanken and Dale Prather, former George Washington stars, who performed with the Orioles and handled themselves well.

Santa Clara Possible Sugar Bowl Selection

New Orleans, Nov. 29 (AP).—Joe Cousins, chairman of the football committee of the New Orleans Mid-winter Sports Association, said tonight the committee "mulled over" the Sugar Bowl situation but had not issued any invitations.

It was considered almost certain that either L. S. U. or Alabama would play as Southern representative in the Sugar Bowl. The intersectional opponent was expected to be either powerful Pitt or the undefeated, untied Santa Clara.

Temple Grid Team Leaves for Coast Tilt

Philadelphia, Nov. 29 (AP).—Temple University's football squad began its long trek to the Pacific Coast tonight for its game in San Francisco next Saturday with the Galloping Gaels of St. Mary's College.

A party of 55, including 33 players, coaches and trainers, boarded the train, scheduled to reach the coast next Thursday morning.

No Clear-Cut Leader In Hectic Grid Year

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Sports Editor.

New York, Nov. 29.—It wouldn't be American College football if it weren't filled with hectic moments, passionate partisanship and the echoing roar of the crowds.

Topped off by a record outpouring of 102,000 fans in freezing weather to see Navy's sensational conquest of Army in Philadelphia's huge municipal stadium, the 1936 season not only sustained some of the gridiron's best traditions for tumultuous action, but reached a number of new "highs" in a campaign of historic proportions.

Still to be settled are a few intersectional arguments such as Notre Dame versus Southern California, the championship of the Southwest conference, and the chief post-season pairings.

With the University of Washington's huskies slated to carry the West Coast's banner in the Rose Bowl on New Year's Day, indications point definitely to the selection of either Alabama or Louisiana State, the deep South's two high-powered, unbeaten arrays, as the party of the second part.

For the Sugar Bowl festivities on the same holiday, it will be no surprise if Pittsburgh's Panthers get the invitation to battle the Southern entry that doesn't make the trip to Pasadena.

Otherwise, in retrospect rather than speculation, the chief contributions of the season comprise:

(1) The absence of any clear-cut claim to national championship honors, with Minnesota, Louisiana State, Pittsburgh, Alabama and Washington the year's potential "first five," subject to final results in the Associated Press ranking poll tomorrow.

(2) A wave of upsets from coast to coast marked by the end of Minnesota's winning streak after 21 consecutive victories, form reversals on the part of nearly all top-notchers, and Duquesne's twin conquests of Pittsburgh and Marquette, two otherwise unbeaten aggregations. Only Santa Clara, which has a late-season engagement to keep with Texas Christian, has come through without tie or defeat in major league combat.

(3) A flock of hotly disputed decisions in major games on goal-line penalties for pass interference, climaxed by the ruling that paved the way for Navy to beat Army, 7 to 0, in the closing minutes of the service battle. The rule makers will be under pressure this winter to reconsider the code and fix a compromise penalty that will curb illegal tactics, but also avoid giving a top-heavy advantage to the offended side.

4. Fresh agitation against subsidizing and recruiting of players, with indications ponting to further official steps being taken against abuses, but with the signs of less hypocritical times also pointing toward recognition of a so-called "middle course' in the handling of this complicated football problem, under regulations such as the Southeastern conference now imposes.

The double-barrelled returns of the last week emphasized, among other factors, the return of the Eastern "old guard" to a bigger share of football power than it has known in at least a dozen years.

Columbia's 7-0 victory in a snowstorm over Stanford, achieved on George Fureys 79-yard return of the opening kick-off, and duplicating the Rose Bowl result of their

Albright Back Tops Eastern Scorers

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 29.—By scoring five touchdowns for 30 points in the final game of the season, Dick Riffle, halfback flash of Albright College in Pennsylvania, won the Eastern football scoring championship of the season.

His finale splurge boosted him to 84 points, passing Fred King, of Hobart, who finished second with 75. Mickey Kobrosky, Trinity's "Little all-American halfback, wound up third with 74, when a recount of his season's records showed he had not previously been credited with two points after touchdown in his opening game against Hamilton, October 3.

Winner Started Slowly.

Riffle, with only 54 points up to the final week of the campaign, had not been rated as a potential winner of the region's scoring laurels. He started slowly this year, getting only 36 points through October, but wound up with three touchdowns against Lebanon Valley, and then added his closing five against Mullenberg.

The honors for kicking extra points were divided by a pair of major college stars, Franny Murray, halfback of the Pennsylvania Powerhouse, and Ken Sandbach, Princeton's signal-caller. Each booted 16 points after touchdown over the season to finish one in front of Red Chesbro, Colgate's kicking tackle, and Halfback Nelson Peterson, of West Virginia Wesleyan, who ended in a second-place tie.

Pro Grid Struggle Off at Cleveland

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Nov. 28.—The Cleveland Rams of the American Professional Football League announced late today cancelation of a scheduled "championship game" tomorrow with the Boston Shamrocks and said it "marks the demise of the American League in Cleveland."

Frank Strock, secretary of the Cleveland Football Club, Inc., claimed in a prepared statement, Boston players "refused to come to Cleveland until they were paid back salaries due them for past games."

The management of the Boston team said earlier at Boston the contest was called off because of snow and cancelation wiped out the last obstacle between the Boston team and the pennant.

Bill Guckeyson Gets All-South Team Spot

Tinsley, Parker Picked Unanimously on United Press' Star Team.

By the United Press.

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 29.—Eleven dynamic players, leaders in a section which produced two of the Nation's major undefeated teams, won places tonight on the United Press' All-South football team.

Carrying the spark that makes gridiron greatness and with the courage, speed and power to continue inspirational play through a grueling season, the 11 players represent the consensus of coaches, players and writers in the deep South.

The Southeastern Conference, where Alabama and Louisiana State emerged undefeated after one of the bitterest campaigns in years, dominated the all-star first team with eight representatives.

Backfield Speedy.

Power, weight, speed, decoption and, above all, courage, are represented in the 11 first-team men. A line averaging 194½ pounds from end to end, at the same time numbers linesmen with the speed to pull out to run interference or to break through with devastating effect on the defensive.

Speed is emphasized in the backfield, averaging 173, reflecting the emphasis on deception in the South this year. The team average is 186½ pounds.

Two great inspirational players, Clarence "Ace" Parker, Duke's back, and Gaynell Tinsley, Louisiana State's end, dominated the poll of Southern sports writers and coaches.

Tinsley, Parker at Top.

Tinsley, unanimously rated as the greatest end the South ever has produced, and Parker, bracketed by Wallace Wade with Beattie Feathers and John Cain as the greatest backs in Southern history, headed virtually every first team in the Southwide poll. Both were on the United Press All-America team.

Pressing this great pair for unanimity of support was "Phantom Phil" Dickens, the leader who made Tennessee a great team where it has been supposed to be weak, and Bill Guckeyson, Maryland's great all-around back.

Harrier Title Won by Lash Third Time

Easy Victory in Cross-Country Run Equals Feat of Ritola.

Indiana Annexes Team Title With Perfect 15-Point Score.

Newark, N. J., Nov. 29 (AP).—Sandy haired Don Lash, University of Indiana's distance runner who holds the world 2-mile record, captured the national A. A. U. cross-country championship today for the third consecutive year.

He covered the 6¼-mile rolling course through Branch Brook Park in 32 minutes 37 seconds.

Lash's victory, achieved by a margin of 350 yards over his teammate and fellow Olympian, Tom Deckard, made him the second runner in the meet's 40-year history to gain the individual crown three successive times. Willlie Ritola, Finnish star, performed the feat from 1925 to 1927, inclusive.

Indiana's powerful squad, undefeated for two seasons, wrested the team crown away from the Millrose Athletic Association, which had held the title from 1929 until today.

Hoosiers' Score Perfect.

The Hoosier Harriers compiled a perfect score of 15 points, an achievement without parallel in three decades. Andrew Zamperelli, of Northeastern University, stopped the parade of Indiana men across the finish line by placing fifth, but he was the school's lone entry, and, accordingly, was disregarded in the team scoring.

A group of 57, representing seven of the cross-country powers in the East and Midwest, were bunched to the mile mark. At this point, Lash, Deckard and James Smith increased the pace and gained a comfortable margin.

Two miles farther, Lash uncorked a sprint to open a wide gap. As Deckard and Smith futilely tried to retake the lost ground, Lash continued to accumulate yardage.

A crowd astimated at 5,000, the tinued to accumulate yardage.

Chicago Cards Wreck Bears' Title Hopes

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Nov. 29.—Chicago's surprising Cardinals, who had lost eight of ten National Pro League games this season, wrecked the title hopes of the Chicago Bears with a 14-to-7 upset victory before 13,704 fans at Wrigley Field today.

In handing the Bears their third defeat of the year, the Cardinals, who last whipped their home-town rivals in 1929, cleared the road for the Green Bay Packers, who triumphed over Detroit today for their tenth win in eleven starts. The Packers, record clinches the league's western division title.

Two final period touchdowns gave the Cards their victory after the Bears had scored in the opening period on a pass to Bill Hewitt which ended a 60-yard drive. Manders converted.

The Cards, led by George Grosvenor, kept hammering away, however, and early in the fourth Grosvenor scored on a short plunge, Smith converting to tie the score. A few minutes later Grosvenor, running from punt formation, swept around left end and sprinted 66 yards for a touchdown, Smith again picking up the extra point.

Boston Blanks Pirates, 30-0; Tie for First

Eastern Crown Is at Stake Next Week When Victors Meet N. Y. Giants.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Nov. 29.—The Boston Redskins pulled into a first place tie with Pittsburgh for the Eastern division's lead in the National Pro Football League by overwhelming the fumbling Pittsburgh Pirates for a 30-to-0 victory today before a scant crowd of 7,000 at Fenway Park.

It was the final game of the season for the Pittsburgh Club and the first shutout it suffered during the campaign. The victory boosted the Redskins into a half game lead over the New York Giants. The Eastern division championship will be at stake next week when these two elevens clash in New York.

The Redskins displayed their most impressive attack of the season, piling up 10 first downs and rushing for a total of 227 yards.

The Bostonians scored in the first, second and final periods. Cliff Battles ploughed over for the first tally from the 2-yard line to end a 75-yard march.

A fumbled punt by John Gildea, which Vic Carroll recovered for Boston on Pittsburgh's 15-yard line, gave Sam Buisch an opportunity to boost the lead to 10-0 by placekicking a 20-yard field goal. Just before the half ended, Carroll intercepted one of Eddie Matesic's southpaw passes and raced 50 yards for the second Boston touchdown.

"Turk" Edwards, Boston's 260-pound supertackle, fell on Warren Heller's fumble in the Pittsburgh end zone for the third touchdown, and the fourth was supplied by Don Irwin, former Colgate star, on a 30-yard dash through center late in the final session.

Picard, Shute Deadlocked For Second

Winner Turns In 70-67 for the Final 36 Holes; Was 80-to-1 Shot.

Armour, Watrous, Hines Tied for 4th; Manero, Runyan Are Next.

By the United Press.

Augusta, Ga., Nov. 29.—Ralph Guldahl, who sells automobiles to the citizens of St. Louis when he isn't playing tournament golf, today won the Augusta Open championship and its $1,000 first prize with a 72-hole aggregate of 283.

He turned the first 18 today in 70, one under par, and, refusing to crack under the pressure, blazed the final 18 in 67 to win by two strokes.

After the finish of his round, Guldahl was unable to come to the press headquarters for the usual interviews and news-reel shots. For, as he explained later, "I had to go back to my hotel room and tend the baby while my wife dressed up for the cup presentation business."

Was 80-to-1 Shot.

Guldahl was quoted as high as 80 to 1 in the pretournament handbooks and is reported to have had many backers who couldn't pass by such odds on a man who finished second by a stroke in the 1933 National Open, and who earlier this year won the Western Open with a par cracking total of 274.

The victory today gave Guldahl the lead over "Light Horse" Harry Cooper in the race for the Radix Trophy, which is awarded annually to the professional with the lowest average score for the year, and greatly increased his chances of making the next Ryder Cup team.

But for an unfortunate occurrence in the first round—he played the wrong ball and suffered a two-stroke penalty—Guldahl would have won even more handily.

22 Share Prize Money.

Twenty-two players shared in the $5,000 prize money with Henry Picard, of Hershey, Pa., the pre-tournament favorite, and Denny Shute, of Boston, winner of the National P. G. A. title last week, splitting $1,300 for second place ties. They had 285's.

A stroke back, and chopping up $1,100 among them were Tommy Armour, of Chicago; Al Watrous, of Detroit, and Jimmy Hines, of Garden City, N. Y. Watrous had one of the three 67's shot today. Guldahl and Cooper being the others who broke the course record by a stroke.

Tony Manero, national open champion, and Paul Runyan tied at 287 and divided $475.

Other high finishers and the money they shared:

Browns Require New Name; How About "Blues?"

St. Louis, Nov. 29 (AP).—Should the name of the St. Louis Browns be changed?

Donald L. Barnes, the American League Club's president, and the other new owners are asking St Louise baseball fans.

They have invited letters from fans here in answer to either of these questions:

Should the name Browns be retained? Why?

Should the name be changed? Why?

Some fans have suggested a new name might mark a fresh start to the team, which has never won a pennant under the present one. Other baseball followers, in favor of retaining "Browns," assert that considerable sentiment is attached to the name.

The owners say there will be season passes for writers of the three best letters on the subject.

East's Final Race Meeting Opens Today at Charles Town Track

Feature Race Draws Good Horses

Program Will Open at 1:30; Daily Double on 2d and 3.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., Nov. 29.—The East's final race meeting of 1936 opens here tomorrow afternoon when the Charles Town Jockey Club stages the first of twelve programs scheduled for the next two weeks at its sporty plant here in the mountains. Although racing has been conducted here since Colonial times, it was in 1933 that Charles Town, following the legalization of pari-mutuel betting in this State, made a bid for a place in the modern turf sun.

After a period of pioneering, this track, within the past year, has developed into one of the best of the smaller plants in the country. Conducting a 37-day meeting last summer, Charles Town amazed turf promoters with its abilities to give the raving public excellent sport at low cost and at the same time show a neat profit.

Purses Are Increased.

Starting tomorrow, the Jockey Club is allowing the horsemen to participate in its success. Purses have been generously raised and a better brand of racing will be the result.

Tomorrow's feature race, the Charles Town Inaugural Purse, would occupy a prominent spot on any program offered in Maryland and outclasses some of the weekday features in that State.

The race is at 6½ furlongs and should result in a keenly-contested event. Rough Party, Buck Langhorne, Enthusiasm, Aroused, Credulous and other horses which won recently on the major ovals will vie for the $600 prize.

The feature is supported by six races with limit fields of eight scheduled to start. Through the also eligible lists Charles Town, amply supplied with horses, will have few starting fields during the meeting of less than eight.

Post Time Is 1:30 o'Clock.

Post time for the first race will be 1:30 o'clock. The races will be conducted at 20-minute intervals, which means that the final should go to the post not later than 4:45 o'clock.

The daily double here is on the second and third races, giving the late arrivals a chance to participate.

The bridge at Harpers Ferry has been reopened to auto traffic, which will be a big help to those driving from Baltimore and Washington as well as Frederick and other Maryland points. Many from the District prefer the Virginia route, through Leesburg.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will conduct its popular race special, leaving Union Station at 11:30 a. m. For the convenience of those who live uptown, the train will stop at Silver Spring at 11:45 and at Rockville at 11:56.

Buses, direct to the track, will start each morning from the Eleventh street side of the Annapolis Hotel at 10:45 a. m.

Dodgers Blast Philadelphia Eagles

Bruising Running Attack Nets Brooklyn Team Victory by 13-7.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Nov. 29.—The Brooklyn Dodgers' bruising running attack overcame the Philadelphia Eagles, 13 to 7, today in a National Profesional Football League game before 5,000.

Battling on even terms throughout the first quarter, the visitors struck out suddenly early in the second to score. Bobby Wilson, on the third play of the period, raced wide to the right, skirted the end, and with four mates paving the way, pranced 61 yards down the sideline to notch 6 points.

Midway through the third period the Dodgers returned a punt on a sustained drive of 70 yards to tally again. Wilson and Kercheval alternated in ramming through the Eagles' line, finally to reach the 3, where Kercheval split center to score. Then he place-kicked the extra point.

Bidding for victory in their last appearance at home, the Eagles passed and plunged 80 yards in the final period to score. Swede Hanson cracked through right tackle for 4 yards on the last play, followed by Hank Reese's placement kick for the conversion.

Packers Down Lions, Throttle Title Hopes

22,000 Watch Green Bay Win, 26-17, Eliminate 1935 Champions.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Nov. 29.—The Detroit Lions, 1935 National League professional football champions, were eliminated today from this year's race by losing to the league-leading Green Bay Packers, 26 to 17.

The game played before 22,000 chilled spectators here was the last mathematical chance for Detroit to stay in the running for the 1936 title.

Behind the brilliant passing of Arnold Heber, the Packers scored in the first minute of play on a pass to Hutson, and they were never headed thereafter.

Seven minutes later the Lions scored after recovering a Packer fumble on the 50-yard line. Clark went over and drop-kicked the point.

The Packers came right back and scored on a line plunge by Hinkle. Smith made good both of the points after touchdown.

In the second period Bill Shepherd stole the ball from Joe Lawes on the Packer 38 and ran the distance for a touchdown. Presnell converted.

Immediately afterward Smith blocked Frank Christensen's attempted punt, which Hutson picked up on the Lion 40 and ran for a touchdown. Smith missed his first conversion of the year.

Englebretsen and Smith place-kicked field goals during the game, and Clark also drop-kicked a 3-pointer.

Isbell, Ex-Enlisted Man, Army Pilot

By the Associated Press.

West Point, N. Y., Nov. 29.—James Horace Isbell, 6-foot 200-pound tackle from Union City, Tenn., who came to West Point from the Regular Army, will captain Army's football team in 1937.

Following an annual custom, the West Point footballers elected Isbell on the way home from the Navy game last night. He succeeds W. W. Stromberg, end, from Chicago.

A second class man (junior), Isbell received an appointment to the Military Academy while serving an enlistment in the Regular Army in 1933. He is Army's outstanding heavyweight boxer and has been on the squad for two years.

Irwin Joins Redskins, Goes Off Pro Blacklist

Boston, Nov. 28 (AP).—The "outlaw" brand placed on Don Irwin, former Colgate backfield ace, by the National Professional Football League was removed today when he joined the Boston Redskins. He will appear here in tomorrow's game against the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Irwin was allotted to the Boston club before the season started, but he failed to report. He was blacklisted when he accepted the more attractive financial terms of the new American League.

Shaeffer May Provide Surprise for Gevinson's Pro Ring Debut

5 Six-Round Fights Also On Card

Rugged BaltimoreanMay Not Be Bothered by Lou's Punches.

By Bill McCormick.

Lou Gevinson, the young Jewish featherweight who burnt up the rings as an amateur, will become just another professional puncher at Turner's Arena when he faces one Al Shaeffer, of Baltimore.

The Gevinson—Shaeffer bout is scheduled for six rounds. It originally was just one bout on an "all-star" card, comprised of five six-rounders and a four.

Interest in the professional debut of Gevinson has become so intense, however, that the rest of the card has faded into practical insignificance, and the contest between the former amateur southpaw and Shaeffer has automatically achieved the status of a main event.

Shaeffer was okayed as an opponent for Lou by his own manager, a gentleman far more familiar with the vagaries of amateur beak biffing than the pro game. The Gevinson one-man board of strategy accepted Shaeffer after seeing Al score handily over Doug Swetnam, considered a pretty good featherweight as featherweights go hereabouts.

Shaeffer May Surprise.

Shaeffer is rough, tough and rugged, but he does not pack a "shock punch." Undoubtedly he who pulls the strings on the former amateur champion believe that sometime during the scheduled distance, Lou will land one of his lethal lefts, thereby nullifying all the professional ring experience Shaeffer possesses.

Lou's director, however, may be in for a rude surprise as Shaeffer is a better than ordinary catcher and may simply soak up all the wallops tossed in his direction and at the same time throw enough leather on his own account to take the decision or even drop Gevinson before the scheduled finish.

If it wern't for the interest attached to the pro bow of Gevinson and the undeniable class and color of the Jewish southpaw, the Gevinson-Shaeffer bout would take a back seat to some of the very promising contests also slated for the same card.

Baggett Faces Test.

Country Boy Baggett, the Georgia heavyweight who's whoopla tactics have proved entertaining in previous bouts here, will face his toughest local opponent in the person of Tom Henry. Henry, a Philadelphia fighter, has whipped Joe Lipps and knocked out Bert Lobman and Steve Kadash.

POST PREDICTIONS.

Bouts are rated from A (lovelyish) to G (awfullish).

MAIN EVENT—Lou Gevinson, Washington, vs. Al Shaeffer, Baltimore, featherweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. If Shaeffer only possessed a one-punch knockout, this would be too much of a test for that former amateur champion. As it is, Lou will have to wear down the Baltimore boy. He should do this early enough to score by a knockout before the scheduled finish.

Country Boy Baggett, Georgia, vs. Tom Henry, Philadelphia, heavyweights; 6 rounds. Rated D. The Country Boy should score, but he will have a helluva time doing it, especially if he doesn't shorten up those roundhouse swings of his.

Joe Temes, Washington, vs. Ray Ineram, Washington, lightweights; 6 rounds. Rated D. Temes will prove too busy for Joey.

Sam Bacala, Baltimore, vs. Bucky Taylor, Baltimore, welterweights; 6 rounds. Rated D. Bacala.

Frank Tymosko, Richmond, vs. Harry Boldey, Baltimore; 6 rounds. Rated D. Frank should make the boldies sing for Boldey.

George Cox, Washington, vs. Valenti Brown, Baltimore; 4 rounds. Rated D. Cox.

No Clear-Cut Grid Leader

1934 post-season match, topped off the Easts fine intersectional record.

Pittsburgh and Duquesne, over the stretch of the campaign, helped members of the traditional "ivy league" to give the East more prestige than it has enjoyed in many moons. Forham likewise did its share until tied by Georgia.

Late in the season, it is noteworthy that it finally fell to the honor of neighboring New York University to hand Fordham's Rams their first defeat, 7-6, on Thanksgiving Day and thus contribute one of the seasons crowning upsets.

Navy's second conquest of Army in three years was no particular surprise, but the midshipmen needed the "breaks" to beat an Army team that showed everything except a goal-line punch, while the East's greatest football crowd looked on. Sneed Schmidt, the "goat" of Navy's defeat by Yale this year, was the hero. The versatile Missouri boy lugged the ball for Navy's touchdown with only three minutes to go, besides doing a grand job of kicking, blocking and tackling.

The penalty that proved so costly to Army's hopes was called on the Cadet 3-yard line after the blocking of a pass, Bill Ingram to Bob Antrim, by West Point's Henry Sullivan. It was the second of two such penalties called during Navy's 73-yard scoring drive. It gave the Navy a 17-yard gain at the crucial stage, instead of what looked like an Army interception, for the ball that Sullivan batted away was plucked from the air by Jim Craig.

Army pounded into Navy's side of the field repeatedly for three-quarters of the game, missed its best chance by losing the ball on downs on Navy's 3-yard line and finally was deprived of its star back, Monk Meyer, because of injury early in the last period.

A record Southern crowd of 48,000 at Baton Rouge saw Louisiana State's mighty Tigers finish with a reverberating roar to wallop Tulane, 33-0, and clinch the Southeastern title for the second straight year. Only an early season deadlock with Texas marred an otherwise perfect record for Bernie Moore's well-rounded aggregation, featuring Gaynell Tinsley, whose performances lifted him to a level of end play shared this season only by Yale's spectacular captain, Larry Kelley.

Alabama, which rallied to whip Vanderbilt, 14 to 6, on Thanksgiving Day, likewise finished its schedule unbeaten but the Crimson Tide was held to a scoreless tie in conference competition by Tennessee.

The Southern Conference championship again went to Duke, thanks largely to the superlative all-around play of Capt. Ace Parker. The Blue Devils closed their season with a holiday rush to beat North Carolina State, 13 to 0, as Parker tallied all the points.

Nebraska, beaten only by Minnesota and Pittsburgh, went West to thrash Oregon State, 32 to 14, yesterday. The Cornhuskers, paced by the redoubtable Sam Francis, achieved a margin of triumph surpassing that of any coast conqueror of Oregon State. Like Minnestota, which finished impressively after its one setback at the hands of Northwestern, Nebraska rebounded sensationally from the Pitt defeat. In their last two games the Huskers rolled up 72 points against Kansas State and Oregon State and now hold the Big Six crown for the second straight year.

Washingon's crushing 40-0 victory over Washington State settling the Pacific Coast conference race and lingering Rose Bowl debate from the Coast standpoint, marked the Huskies as one of the Nation's powerhouses. Tied by Stanford in an upset, but beaten only by Minnesota in a close contest, Washington returns to the postseason arena after a lapse of ten years. The Huskies lost to Alabama in a 20-19 thriller in the 1926 Rose Bowl match.

Southern Methodist's comeback to hold the favored Texas Christians to a scoreless tie leaves the Southwest conference race still in doubt.

Arkansas, with a passing attack that has no superior in its own bailiwick or elsewhere in the U. S. A., now has a slight advantage over T. C. U., but must beat Texas next Saturday to clinch the championship. Rice, which lost to Baylor's last-period rally by a 10-7 count yesterday, finishes its campaign against S. M. U. at Houston this week, while Texas A. and M. entertains Chick Meehan's wandering Manhattan boys at Tyler, Tex.

The veteran Gil Dobie, ousted at Cornell this spring, made his first season at Boston College a success by seeing his pupils outpointing Holy Cross, 13 to 12, in a hot battle on a frozen field. Meantime Cornell's sophomores, under the new coaching regime of Carl Snavely, looked good enough to warrant high hopes for 1937 despite defeat in all five "Ivy League" games, including a closing 14-6 setback at the hands of Pennsylvania.

Georgia's Bulldogs, after being kicked around in midseason, followed up their tie with Fordham by tripping Georgia Tech, 16 to 6, in another traditional match.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

I would not go so far as to say that the better team lost on Saturday when Army dipped its colors to Navy, but aside from that final score of 7 to 0 Navy is hardly eager to answer many questions about the ball game.

Because Navy, for three quarters, was a badly outplayed team and the touchdown the Middies did come up with to win the ball game was a badly tainted affair.

It is usually a hair-line decision whenever a penalty for interference with a pass is called. The rule is clear-cut enough. Any bodily contact with an eligible receiver which does not occur at a time when the defender is making an honest attempt to catch the pass himself is interference and the pass is ruled complete.

But there was a significant lack of agreement up there in Philadelphia when Mr. E. E. Miller, the field judge, ruled interference on the part of Army and gave Navy the ball three yards from the goal with three minutes to play.

POVICH.

After the game, Mr. Miller, in a statement to the Associated Press, explained his ruling. Henry Sullivan, the Army back, rode the back of Bob Antrim, the Navy receiver, for three yards in an attempt to knock the ball down, Mr. Miller said.

All of which might be acceptable enough, except that Head Coach Tom Hamilton, of Navy, emphatically told newspapermen after the game that Erwin Fike, Navy end, was the man who had been fouled on the play. Somewhere, somehow, something is screwy and somebody is as wet as the Lusitania. Personally, I didn't see any foul and I had a pair of superheterodyne glasses glued on the play.

Anyway, it served to give Navy the ball three yards from the goal and for the second time in two seasons pass interference cost Army an important touchdown. It was almost exactly one year ago at Yankee Stadium that interference with a Notre Dame pass by Army gave the Irish the ball on the 4-yard line in the last minute of play, whereupon Notre Dame tied the score, 6 to 6.

Navy was the recipient of another extremely good break at the start of the second quarter when Monk Meyer finally made his appearance in the Army line-up. Except for a rare piece of tough luck, Meyer would have galloped 70 yards with a punt for an Army touchdown.

The little tyke who was, undeniably, the best back on the field, got his hands on the ball for the first time when he gathered in one of Schmidt's punts on his own 30-yard line, sucked in both of Navy's ends, changed his pace and literally sidled up the field and then veered to the sidelines with one blocker and a clear field ahead of him.

But his blocker, Maurice Preston, had the ill luck to stumble and Meyer, who had been able to elude 11 Navy men, couldn't keep out of Preston's path and tumbled to the ground after a 30-yard runback.

That was a tough Navy team, though, that Tom Hamilton sent out on the field. For three quarters Army was almost continually pounding at the goal only to founder on the reefs of a bristling Navy defense. What with Bill Ingram proving a veritable hawk in knocking down Army passes, and Case and Schmidt and Franks and Fike and Morrell smearing Army plans, Navy appeared as if it might stand off Army's threats for a week, at least.

And in Sneed Schmidt, Navy presented a performer who on this greatest of Navy days came emphatically into his own. Overshadowed all season by the presence of the talented Bill Ingram in the same backfield, and with Ingram's distinguished football lineage winning the latter most of the press notices, Schmidt proved the spark of the Navy team.

He was the work horse of the Navy backfield. He caught the opening kickoff and then carried the ball on the next three plays, ripping off 10 yards through the Army line on his first attempt and the 102,000 in the stands were quickly alive to the presence of this talented performer.

Even Schmidt's game-winning touchdown gallop through the Army line, coming as it did after the pass-interference penalty, did not provide as great a thrill as one of his feats in the second quarter when the 102,000 truly marveled.

Back on their heels after stopping an Army assault on their 7-yard line, Navy quickly called for Schmidt to punt them out of danger. And Schmidt, standing 4 yards behind his goal line truly did punt 'em out of danger. The stocky lad from St. Joe, Mo., actually kicked that ball 83 yards to the Army 19-yard line.

It might have ended differently, though, if the Army had had the services of Monk Meyer in that fourth quarter. But with the game drawing to a close, Meyer was on the bench for the last 14 minutes of the game, nursing a groin injury suffered when he was tackled heavily by Art Franks. However, there's no law against a swell tackle, and that's what Franks brought Meyer down with.

Gonzaga High Downs Reservoir Ramblers

Gonzaga High School continued to haunt local teams, the latest victim being the Reservoir Ramblers, who were defeated, 12 to 6, yesterday at Brookland Bowl.

Both of the winners' scores resulted from passes. Johnny Beard stepped in front of an enemy pass and sped 55 yards for the first touchdown, while a 25-yard aerial, George Merry to Krogman, accounted for the second.

Seeks Post-Season Foe.

St. Louis, Nov. 29 (AP).—Angling for an outstanding team to oppose St. Louis University in a post-season charity football game here, Father Charles P. Maxwell, Boys Club director, said today he had sent "feeler" invitations to Auburn, New York University, Michigan State, Texas Christian and Arkansas.

Roosevelt Gym Open.

The Roosevelt High gymnasium will be open Monday nights from 8:30 to 9:30 p. m. for teams wishing games. Teams wanting to reserve the floor for games call at Room 103 in the evening or the Community Center Department at Franklin School in the daytime. An admission charge of 10 cents per person will be charged.

Fredericksburg Deals Regals 1st Defeat, 7-6

Fredericksburg, Va., Nov. 29.—The Fredericksburg Big Reds gave the Regal eleven of Washington its first defeat of the season here this afternoon, a 7-6 defeat. The locals outgained the Washingtonians 11 first downs to 6.

Regal scored early in the second quarter when a bad Fredericksburg pass gave them the ball on Fredericksburg's 3-yard line. Buonliviri carried it over from there.

A few minutes later after receiving a kick Goldy Lowrey passed to Dice for 35 yards, the latter falling over the goal line to score for Fredericksburg. Lowery place-kicked for the extra and deciding point.

Tars Acclaim Team, Ring Old Victory Bell

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 29.—For the second time in 15 years, the Navy was able this evening to welcome a football team which returned victorious from a game with an Army eleven, and it did it with gusto.

The players were carried from the station to Bancroft Hall on fire trucks gladly loaned by the City of Annapolis, and one by one rang the old Japanese bell which is sounded only when a Navy team wins from the Army. With its pagoda-like frame, it has been placed on top of the steps of Bancroft Hall.

During the past week or more the team has been exhorted by a sign of 5-foot letters to "ring the bell," and this is what they did tonight. Each player, headed by Capt. River Morrell, the captain, gave the ball seven taps.

Duke Ferrara, the stout tackle, as he rang it, said: "That's the sweetest sound I ever heard," and Sneed Schmidt, who scored the touchdown, remarked, "Well, we did it." Another said only, "What a feeling." Players below the graduating class promised two more Navy victories.

Tom Hamilton, head coach, declared that his team was "the greatest bunch of men he had ever seen." The last to ring the bell was Rear Admiral David F. Sellers, superintendent of the academy.

Custom has provided that the captain of the team should be a linesman who is a member of the graduating class, and this would seem to limit the choice of next year's leader to Irwin F. Fike, Normal, Ill., left end, or Raymond F. Dubois, Naugatuck, Conn., left guard.

Arlington, Palace Win League Games

While the league-leading Regal Clothiers were idle, no important changes were recorded in the National City 150-pound league standings yesterday. The Arlington A. C. defeated Trinity A. C., 16-0, to retain its lead over Palace A. C. in second place, although Palace also won, 25-0, from the Cardinals.

Fullback Gissel featured Arlington's attack, scoring both touchdowns, a safety accounting for the other points. Trinity was continually on the defensive due to the fine running of Billy Edwards and Johnny Leymour, and never passed its own 40-yard mark.

At Duffy Park in Seat Pleasant, Md., the Palace A. C. gained an easy victory over the last-place Cardinals.

On the Air Today

Two outstanding programs are scheduled today in observance of the Pan-American Peace Conference. One, at 7, WMAL, offers a half hour from the South American end of radio's connection of the continents with six correspondents, advisers and executives from the United States discussing the pre-conference opening situation.

WJSV, at 10:30, presents an array of orchestras and soloists in a "salute to the Inter-American Peace Conference," a program especially designed for short-waving to Central and South Americas. Freddie Rich, Mark Warnow and Lud Gluskin will conduct the orchestras. Buddy Clark, Tito Guizar, Chiquito, Alexander Semmler and the Song Stylists wil provide the vocal and instrumental highlights.

President Roosevelt's address at the conference Tuesday will be short-waved to American listeners.

Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe tells in his regular Monday broadcast from Callander today (WJSV, 11:45 a. m.) how he disciplines the Dionne quints. They have never known what a spanking is, says Dr. Dafoe, but punishment follows surely when they do things they shouldn't. He says that his broadcast is a rather round-about method of trying to answer the numerous letters he has received from mothers who wish to know how to prevent their children from quarreling. It has to do with solitary confinement; but you'll want to hear the doctor's story for yourself.

Faith Baldwin—And Tony and Renee DeMarco, dance team, appear in "Magazine of the Air," WJSV, at 11:30 a. m.

"Singing Fishwife" — The vocal "find" who three months ago sang her arias to bunches of vegetables and cases of seafood, makes first public appearance at WMAL, at 4:30. She is Mrs. Mary Witte, of Stroudsburg, Pa., and described by Dr. Giacomo Bourg, former coach at the Metropolitan Opera, as "the greatest dramatic soprano voice in the country today." Mrs. Witte will sing Brahms' "Lullaby," an aria from Handel's "Armida" and an excerpt from Verdi's "Aida."

Ireene Wicker—Begins her annual series of Christmas stories today, WMAL, at 5:30.

Man Bites Dog!—"Fibber McGee and Molly" feature Tom Fizdale, their press agent, in tonight's program, WRC, at 8. He'll play the role of a press agent, too.

Richard Crooks—Sings "Neapolitan Love Song," from "Princess Pat;" "Amor Ti Vieta" from "Fedora;" "Bird Songs at Eventide" by Coates, WRC, at 8:30. With Margaret Speaks, he sings "If I Am Dreaming."

Loretta Young—supported by Jimmie Gleason, gives radio verison of "Polly of the Cricus," WJSV, at 9, in "Radio Theater."

Alec Templeton — Blind pianist heard last season with Jack Hylton and his orchestra, guests with Richard Himber and orchestra, WRC, at 9:30. Also Midge Williams, young Negro rhythm singer.

Here and there: Fred Astaire has recovered and will be back in the line-up tomorrow night. Incidentally, Conrad Thibault has been engaged permanently for the Astaire show . . . So much mail has been received on the Kate Smith "Command Appearance" idea that another program is being prepared to do dramatizations of Carnegie medal-winners' exploits — with Ted Husing as commentator . . . Bing Crosby celebrates his first year as "master" of the "Music Hall" this coming Thursday night . . . Rumor says "Amos 'n' Andy" will change their eight-year-old policy and go in strongly for guest artists. Frank Parker, mentioned here a day or two ago, apparently is merely the first of a steady flow.

Steel Output Up to 75½%, Six-Year Peak

High Operating Rate Seems Assured Into Next Quarter.

Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 29.—Demand for steel showed an appreciable increase last week following the price announcements, and the national steelworks operating rate advanced 1 point to 75½ per cent, highest since the spring of 1930, says Steel.

Large orders for rails and railroad equipment provided the feature of the week. In these lines and in other iron and steel commodities where the price advances are expected to stimulate bookings, there were many indications that a high rate of operations will be assured for the balance of this year and into the first quarter of 1937.

Large Auto Orders.

One of the longest-term buying programs in the history of the automobile industry is under way at present. By the middle of December it is expected that commitments will have been made for more than 2,000,000 automobiles.

It is roughly estimated that General Motors advance orders will be sufficient for approximately 800,000 assemblies, while Chrysler's will be for 650,000 and Ford's for more than 500,000.

Many persons expect that 900,000 cars of the 1937 lines will be built before this calendar year is over. In accordance with the predictions of a 5,000,000-car year for 1937, the industry thus would have ten months in which to turn out 4,100,000 models, or at an average of 410,000 a month. Last week, because of the holiday, production was down about 6,000 units to 104,283.

Shape awards, 15,675 tons during the week, were up slightly, and included 3,800 tons for the Sixth avenue subway, New York. Bids will be opened December 8 on 47,700 tons of cast iron segments for the Port of New York Authority. Bids were opened last week for a floating navy drydock for Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, which will require 22,636 tons of plates.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Rally From Threats and Find Respite on Credit and Foreign Control.

New York, Nov. 29.—Speculative markets shivered a little last week from the hints that the Securities Exchange Commission would tighten control over professional operators and from virtual assurance that the Federal Reserve Board would proceed before long further to draw down the volume of excess bank reserves.

On top of that the possibility also was considered that, if under the influence of a great outpouring of extra dividends, wage increases and bonuses and other surface evidences of rising business prosperity the speculative markets should come to look too inflationary, the Federal Reserve Board might again increase margin requirements.

Commodity prices continued to harden, but the week's operations in stocks did not indicate any increase of training on margin. Brokers' loans rose sharply, but bond dealers probably were responsible and the general character of the trading suggests more cash buying than borrowing for the purpose. Threats against the markets, combined with an early week darkening of the war outlook in Europe, and a feeling that much of the good cheer caused by higher dividends had been discounted by stock prices, brought a heavy setback at the start, but after some irregularity the losses were regained and the week closed on a strong recovery. Government bonds also rallied from their early weakness as some reassurance was given on interest rates, foreign withdrawals, and the Treasury's financing plans for next month.

Getting Ready.

Meanwhile, the way is being prepared to put credit under greater control. The Treasury has just published a survey of the influx of foreign capital to this country during the last 21 months—i. e., from the date of the beginning of recovery here after the washing out of the early effects of the New Deal. The capital which has come this way, forced or seduced by familiar causes, corresponds closely in volume to the figures mentioned by most commentators since the subject was brought up a fortnight ago by President Roosevelt's reference.

Presumably at that time the survey was virtually complete and the public was given a tip as to what would be shown. That such a survey was made and the results published seems to have for its object the justification for credit control measures to be taken within the next few months by the Treasury and its co-worker, the Federal Reserve Board. In less than two years foreigners have sent over $2,281,659,000, more than 40 per cent of it going into American securities.

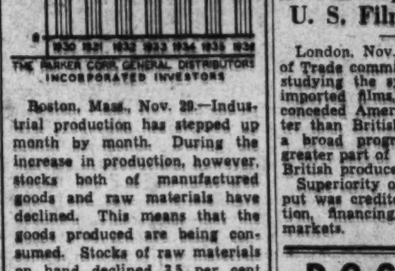
Whatever the cause of the influx —fear of wars and currency devaluation abroad, or the seeking of attractive investments here— eventually much of the funds will return to Europe. It does not necessarily follow that their withdrawal will bear down on our security prices; on the contrary, the money is unlikely to leave until other factors are weakening our market. What seems to concern the authorities is that a further inflow will help to work up inflationary markets.

Another measure which, highly commendable though it is on the long view, might weaken stocks for a while, is repeal of the capital gains tax. Some expectation that the Administration might be willing to consider such a proposal is held in Wall Street. Naturally, Wall Street would like to have no such tax, but in the past few years absence of such a tax would not have increased trading, while it would have lifted Government tax collections.

At this time a prime reason for the unusually high ratio of prices to earnings is the large investment of those who are willing to see wide price declines before deciding to sell. Otherwise they would simply be obliged to pay over most of their profits to the Government.

Removal of the capital gains tax conceivably would cause enough selling—with a later return to the markets—to stop the advance. The bulk of stock holdings are nevertheless in the market for long-term appreciation and will be retained until business prospects change for the worse.

Supplies Decline As Output Grows



Boston, Mass., Nov. 29.—Industrial production has stepped up month by month. During the increase in production, however, stocks both of manufactured goods and raw materials have declined. This means that the goods produced are being consumed. Stocks of raw materials on hand declined 3.5 per cent during the last year, and were 37 per cent lower than their high in November, 1933.

Norfolk & Western To Spend $8,000,000

New York, Nov. 29 (AP).—The Norfolk & Western Railroad announced today it was in the market for equipment to cost approximately $8,000,000, including 1,000 hopper cars and 40,000 tons of rails and fastenings.

In addition it will build in its own shops at Roanoke, Va., 8 high-speed freight locomotives, 500 gondola cars and 500 hopper cars.

An issue of 70,000 shares of cumulative convertible preferred stock (par value $20, annual dividend $1.25) of the Atlas Plywood Corporation is being offered today at $25 per share and accrued dividends by Van Alstyne, Noel & Co., of New York, and James M. Johnston & Co. of Washington.

The proceeds of the sale will be used to redeem at 105 the outstanding 8½ per cent gold debentures and any balance will be applied to corporate purposes. "There is not in this country wealth or enough income," the Ford Motor Co. official said. "Even though you divided it equally—a process that would create more injustice than it cured—still equal division would at least prove to us that there is not enough."

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., Nov. 29.—Winchester's new municipal airport will be ready for service in April or May, it was learned today from William C. Poston, resident highway engineer, who is directing the construction of runways.

Two runways 1,800 feet long and 250 feet wide are being built. Later it is planned to widen them to 300 feet. The actual work on the runways probably will be completed next month, but the final conditioning of the field will have to await spring weather.

Hunters Are Warned Game Can't Be Sold

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Danville, Va., Nov. 29.—Rabbits and squirrels which have been shot cannot be sold by those who shoot them.

The State game commission has issued a ruling prohibiting the sale of shot game, but permits the sale of rabbits and squirrels which have been trapped.

The reason is a desire to preserve the game stocks seen to be at a low ebb this fall as result of the hard winter last year.

Capital Jockey And New Bride Head for South

Eddie Smith in 'Runaway' With the Former Miss Florence Boteler.

Eddie Smith, one of Washington's best-known jockeys, yesterday had slipped his halter and was on his way South with a new bride.

She is the former Florence Margaret Boteler, 23, whose stepfather, Leslie A. Dorland, of 44 Bryant street northwest, is the owner of the race horse Sir Rose.

The runaways surprised their parents and friends, none of whom knew a wedding was planned at St. Gabriel's Church Saturday, although the couple had been close friends for four years.

Eddie, who was formally christened Edward E. Smith, has been popular with local fans and horse owners and is rated the town's most promising young rider, a budding rival to Sonny Workman.

He learned his trade training horses at Benning track. His father has owned horses, and Eddie got his first chance in real competition on one of his father's mounts.

Last week he was hired by Araho Stable, owned by Mrs. Walter O'Hara, wife of the New England sportsman who operates Narragansett. With this new opportunity, the youngster may reach the national limelight.

Early yesterday Eddie and his bride started to motor to Florida, where he will ride at Tropical Park. The bride's stepfather will follow.

Erosion Problems To Be Discussed

Planning to discuss problems of beach erosion and coastal protection work, members of the American Shore and Beach Preservation Association will meet here December 14. The one-day meeting in the auditorium of the National Research Council will mark the tenth anniversary of the founding of the organization, J. Spencer Smith, president, announced yesterday.

Inviting participation in the conference by engineers, public officials and private citizens confronted with the problems to be discussed, Mr. Smith said the program will include a review of the scientific advances made in coast and beach preservation work in the last decade.

Among others, engineers and civilian members of the Beach Erosion Board will participate.

Directors who joined Mr. Smith in his invitation to all interested persons to attend the meeting include: Capt. R. S. Patton, director of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey; John A. Lesner, Virginia State Senator; P. A. Morison, of the Maryland State Road Commission; Judge Vivian Frank Gable, of Philadelphia, and Prof. Thorndike Saville, director of the water resources division of President Roosevelt's National Resources Board, who is also dean of the College of Engineering, New York University.

Missionary to Talk To D. C. Church Group

Albert D. Helser, missionary to Nigeria and West Africa representative of the American Mission to Lepers, will address the Washington City Auxiliary Mission to Lepers the Christmas ingathering Friday in Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The program will begin at 11 a. m., and will include a noon luncheon. W. M. Danner, general secretary of the American Mission, will also speak.

The auxiliary last year raised $4,137 through its Sunday school classes, missionary societies and other church organizations. The amount needed to care for a leper for one year is estimated by officials of the auxiliary to be $40.
